HISTORICAL

The CENTURY was founded, and its first Constitution adopted, January 13, 1847. One hundred gentlemen engaged or interested in Letters and the Fine Arts had been invited to join in forming the Association, of which number forty-two accepted the invitation and became Founders. Forty-six others joined during the year.

The name, suggested by the number originally invited to be members, was the proposal of Edgar S. Van Winkle.

On March 7, 1857, it was incorporated by an Act of the Legislature, which was amended March 29, 1883.

From the spring of 1847 to the spring of 1849 it occupied rooms at No. 495 Broadway.

From the spring of 1849 to the spring of 1850 it occupied rooms at No. 435 Broome Street.

From the spring of 1850 to May, 1852, it occupied rooms at No. 575 Broadway.

From May, 1852, to the spring of 1857, it occupied the house at No. 24 Clinton Place (now No. 46 East 8th Street).

From the spring of 1857 to January 5, 1891, it occupied the house at No. 109 (old No. 42) East Fifteenth Street.

On January 10, 1891 it removed to its present club-house, No. 7 West Forty-third Street.

Successive amendments to the Constitution fixed the limit of resident membership as follows: March 5, 1853, 200 members; March 7, 1857, 250; May 7, 1859, 350; February 1, 1862, 400; April 7, 1866, 500; February 6, 1875, 600; December 5, 1885, 700; May 3, 1890, 800; February 6, 1892, 1000. The limit of non-resident membership has been fixed as follows: February 6, 1892, 300; December 3, 1921, 400; January 14, 1928, 500; June 3, 1941, 600; March 1, 1945, 700.

On May 4, 1901, John Bigelow and Parke Godwin, only surviving members of The Column, a literary society founded in 1825, presented to The Century the privileges of fellow-membership with them. The silver memorial column bears a lamp which since 1858 had burned at every meeting of The Column and is now lighted at each gathering of The Century.

REPORT OF THE BOARD OF MANAGEMENT

THE Board of Management submits the following report for the year 1955:

Minneapolis, Minnesota: Crossing the Ford, Platte River, Colorado, by Worthington Whittredge

Gifford R. Beal, Chairman; Stephen C. Clark, Chairman of Committee on Exhibitions; Donald Oenslager, Chairman of House-Art Committee

FROM THE COMMITTEE ON LITERATURE

Often in the past, various chairmen of the Committee on Literature have been strongly tempted, with proper humility and decorum, to stand in the archway between the dining room and the library and declaim this passage from the Act to Incorporate: "for the purpose of promoting the advancement of art and literature by establishing and maintaining a library, reading room and gallery of art, and by such other means as shall be expedient for that purpose"! The year 1955 is memorable for the fact that this solemn duty is no longer required of your chairman. By the imaginative enterprise of the House Committee, the library has been restored to its pristine uses, and excess diners are happily embowered in the glassed-in loggia. Requiescant!

No attempt has ever been made to collect rare books for the Association, but members and friends over the years have given or bequeathed some treasures. In 1955, these were carefully repaired and restored. Two glass cases, already in the Association's possession, were set up on the landing before the entrance to the art gallery, and here, from time to time, will be displayed some of the rarer items.

During the year, 169 books were purchased, and 57 were presented to the library, making a total of 226 acquisitions for the year. On behalf of the Association, the Committee gratefully acknowledges gifts from the following members:

FROM THE HOUSE COMMITTEE

It may be true that the only constant is change. Even an institution which cherishes its traditions as ardently as the Century undergoes continuing if gradual transformation. The House Committee, mindful of its obligation to preserve the character and spirit of our physical surroundings, proceeds very cautiously with modern improvements. One example is the providing of air-conditioning in the already re-furbished Medal Room. This seems to have been an acceptable and successful experiment. Studies have been made for similar treatment of the private dining rooms on the fourth floor, with as yet inconclusive results. Who can tell but that some day these rooms may be made more comfortable in hot weather.

Under Donald Oenslager's direction the stairs and hall leading to the Billiard Room have been redecorated, provided with attractive lighting fixtures, and embellished with paintings hitherto concealed from general view. He has similarly enlivened the Graham Library, which has received handsome new curtains.

The exterior north wall of the building has been repainted, and decoration and planting added to the rear terrace.

Lawrence Grant White presented a banner which now hangs over the entrance to the Art Gallery, an appropriate accompaniment to the fine bust of Washington. The banner dates from the middle of the last century and at one time belonged to the Artillery Company of Lexington, Kentucky. Each ring of its gold chain is inscribed with the name of a state and the date of its admission to the Union.

John Angel's entertaining bronze group of Balaam and his Ass, already announced as the generous gift of Thomas Robins, has been placed on the round table in the East Room. Centurions who gather there before lunch and wish to be reminded of the incident can find the scriptural narrative recorded in an example of beautiful typography encased in a handsome leather binding lying beside the figure. This folder is due to the generosity of Clifton P. Williamson.

The flagpoles on the front of the building have been replaced with new ones, and a new Century Association Flag now proudly flies from the eastern pole. Students of heraldry among us had objected that the predecessor flag with the lamp hanging parallel to the staff was in reality a banner and therefore improperly attached to the staff. The new flag with the lamp at right angles to the staff is truly a flag. There will, no doubt, continue to be disagreement on the merits of the two designs, but we are, at any rate, proper heraldically.

The beautiful and aged wrought iron railing of the balcony had suffered severely from the elements. It has been completely repaired and restored. This precious example of the vanishing art of the iron worker should now be safe for the next century.

In the June Bulletin was published the following Memorandum from the House Committee, prepared in inimitable style by Karl Vogel, as have been all announcements of the Committees during the past several years:

> "The Library Is Meant for Reading"
>
> Except for the nights of the Monthly Meetings, the Century's busiest time, or possibly—as Sir Winston might say—its finest hour, is the luncheon period. Of recent years this has been becoming more and more evident, and those who do not often appear here in the middle of the day can have little idea of how many Centurions assemble on the second floor at noontime.
> The ever increasing crowd moves up to the Dining Room, overflows into the intervening hall, and then—takes possession of the Library! There are those still living who can remember this as a gracious resort where quiet prevailed, always available as a refuge for undisturbed relaxation or for more intensive preoccupation with writing or research. This was long ago, and it has come to be accepted as a necessary evil that every day much of this formerly tranquil spot has to be given up to luncheon tables, so that what was intended as a facility to supply food for thought is now devoted to the consumption of more material aliment.

Thus the normal functions of the Library have been impaired and its purposes perverted, for even during a considerable period both before and after the serving of the meal there is inevitably a great deal of noisy activity making the room unusable by readers. This means that much of the time the Library is not a Library at all, and the numerous complaints regarding this curtailment of one of the Century's most valuable and enjoyable advantages are completely justified.

The ideal solution to the difficulty by the addition of another story to the building is a hope that must remain so long deferred that it offers no relief in the present emergency. There are, however, two areas that would accommodate a considerable number of tables and so set free the Library. The Graham Room could be used for this purpose, and still more effectively, room could be gained by enclosing in glass and otherwise improving the Loggia. By this latter measure what is now waste space and something of an eyesore could be made useful and be transformed into an attractive and inviting addition to the Dining Room both in summer and in winter. A brochure with drawings and a description of the proposed changes will be sent out, and the project, which has been approved in principle by the Board of Management, will be submitted to the membership for final action.

It has been commented that frequently, even though the Dining Room and especially the Long Table, are only partially filled, many persons are lunching in the Library, which is dotted with twosomes. As an act of urgent first aid to this long-suffering locality, the Board of Management has decided on the recommendation of the House Committee that, beginning at an early date, no tables for the serving of luncheon shall be set in the Library.

This was followed by a poem by L. G. W. entitled "Logistics" and herewith reprinted:

Our Loggia, of chaste design
Is dated MDCCCLXXXIX
Then, members could foregather there
To sniff the unpolluted air—
To sit and talk or doze and dream—
For golden silence reigned supreme.

1955

The hardy few who now have tried
To sniff the carbon monoxide
Are covered with a coat of soot
And deafened by the taxis' toot,
The shrieks of brakes, the siren's scream!
The decibels now reign supreme,
And members who would sally forth
Prefer the terrace to the north.

1956?

Your board hopes this may come to pass:
An air-tight screen of bronze and glass
Be cunningly erected in Between each column and its twin.
The noise and smells we can't abide,
The soot—would all be kept outside;
The dozen members dining there
Would sniff the cool, conditioned air . . .

Then all Centurions, man and boy,
Could use their loggia with joy!

At the June meeting the membership authorized the project of enclosing the Loggia, and work commenced shortly thereafter. Completion of construction was announced in the December Bulletin. In the interval there was, of course, a certain amount of disturbance on the third floor. The results, however, appear to have met with general approval. The Library has been preserved for reading. Handsome curtains have been hung between the columns separating the central hall from the Library, and no longer is there a daily invasion by those seeking culinary rather than literary nourishment.

The Loggia itself has developed a capacity slightly greater than anticipated and has become a popular resort. It is indeed a cheerful spot and provides a charming vista, both from inside looking out by day and from across the street looking up by night. The tall plants selected by Gilmore Clarke both for decorative effect and durability are ficus panduratus, belonging to the rubber tree family.

The office of McKim, Mead and White has been in charge of carrying out the design. We are greatly indebted to Lawrence Grant White, its author, and to James Kellum Smith for the generous donation of their services. The Association has paid only the actual office costs. This kind of work requires time and attention out of proportion to its size, so that this contribution of our fellow members is a truly handsome one.

The Loggia, previously neglected except by the pigeons, has become a useful and beautiful feature of the Clubhouse.

Gifts to the Century during the year, not previously mentioned, which the House Committee on behalf of the Association wishes to acknowledge with gratitude, include:

Venison from George E. Brewer, Jr.
Brook Trout from Edward R. Finch.
Flowers from Stuart W. Jackson.
Maple Syrup from Walter H. Kilham, Jr.

On January 13 the Annual Meeting of the Association was held. As always, it was in memory of our fellow members who had died during the year. Subsequent meetings, with the speakers and their topics, were as follows:

February 3—Philip Hofer, "Four Modern French Bestiaries," from illustrated books by Toulouse-Lautrec, Bonnard, Dufy, and Picasso. Mr. Hofer illustrated his talk with slides.

March 3—Maurice Ewing, a talk on "Explorations in the Atlantic Ocean."

April 7—Sheldon Keck, a talk on "Explorations in Paint: The Laboratory Examination and Care of Paintings and the Detection of Forgery." Mr. Keck illustrated his talk with films and slides.

May 5—Thomas K. Finletter, on "The Current Drift to War."

November 3—Reginald Allen, "An Evening of Gilbert and Sullivan," with an account of the first D'Oyly Carte Opera Company American Tour in 1880, followed by a selection of favorites from the Savoyard repertories, presented by Miss Cynthia Morey, soprano, Jeffrey Skitch, baritone, and William Coxe-Ife, Assistant Musical Director, as accompanist, all of the D'Oyly Carte Opera Company.

December 1—Frank Edward Brown, "The Mountain of Nimrod, A Sermon in Stones," an illustrated account of the funerary monument of Antiochus of Commagene atop a 9000-foot peak in Asia Minor.

The Dinner of Welcome to New Members was held on October 13. A very large gathering heard the Address of Welcome given by Gilmore D. Clarke.

OTHER MATTERS

Committee on Honors. At its June meeting, the Board of Management created a Committee on Honors "to make recommendations to the Board from time to time with respect to nomination for Honorary Membership, award of the Century Medal, selection for the Century Medallion, and the giving of silver cups in memory of deceased Centurions."

Pursuant to the Board's action, President Kieffer appointed the following as members of the Committee: Gilmore D. Clarke, Chairman, Henry Irving Brock, Allen Evarts Foster, Paul Manship, and Karl Vogel.

Concerning the purpose of the Committee, the Board of Management authorized the following statement, which appeared in the Monthly Bulletin:

"The Committee on Honors is an advisory body to assist the Board of Management through recommendations as to the honoring of Centurions by their fellows. It is not intended as a substitute for the interest of members of the Association in proposing fellow members for recognition or in giving silver cups in memory of deceased Centurions. Its duty will be to make recommendations as to procedure, to initiate nominations for awards, and, at the request of the Board, to study and report on nominations made by other members of the Association.

"For the early attention of the Committee will be the consideration of the procedure with respect to the Century Medallions and the silver cups. To date, these have been on such an informal basis that the names of the Centurions for whom the Medallions have been made or in memory of whom cups have been given, are not even listed in the records of the Association."

At its December meeting, the Board of Management approved the following recommendations made by the Committee on Honors in its first report:

(1) That the Association consider amending the Constitution so as to require that a candidate proposed for Honorary Membership must receive not less than nine-tenths of the votes cast at a Monthly Meeting, instead of the unanimous vote now required. (This amendment was adopted by the Association in April, 1956.)

(2) That the Century Medal for distinguished service to the Association be awarded occasionally, not more often than once a year, by the Board of Management.

(3) That the Committee on Honors from time to time recommend to the Board of Management the design and subsequent casting of Century Medallions to honor Centurions, the Committee on Art to select the medalist in each case.

(4) That an attempt be made to compile a list of the Centurions in whose memory friends have presented Silver Cups to the Association and that the Chairman of the Committee on Honors assist in arranging that the gift of such cups in the future be noted in the records of the Century.

Proposers' and Seconders' Letters. The Committee on Admissions concurred in the decision by the Board of Management that, to facilitate the work of the Historian, the letters from the proposer and seconder of candidates who were elected members of the Association would henceforth be deposited in the Archives.

REQUIREMENTS OF
COMMITTEE ON ADMISSIONS

AN ACT TO INCORPORATE
THE CENTURY ASSOCIATION

PASSED MARCH 7, 1857

The People of the State of New York, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows:

Section 1. Gulian C. Verplanck, William C. Bryant, Charles M. Leupp, Asher B. Durand, John F. Kensett, William Kemble and William H. Appleton, and such other persons as are now associated as "The Century," or may hereafter become associated with them, are hereby constituted a body corporate by the name of "The Century Association," to be located in the city of New-York, for the purpose of promoting the advancement of art and literature by establishing and maintaining a library, reading room and gallery of art, and by such other means as shall be expedient and proper for that purpose.

§ 2. The said corporation shall have the power to make and adopt a constitution and by-laws, rules and regulations, for the admission, suspension and expulsion of its members, and their government, the election of its officers and to define their duties, and for the safe keeping and protection of its property and funds, and from time to time to alter or repeal such constitution, by-laws, rules and regulations. The seven persons named in the first section of this act shall constitute the trustees and managers until others are elected in their places.

§ 3. The said corporation may purchase and hold or lease any real and personal estate; provided that they shall not hold any real estate the value of which shall exceed the sum of fifty thousand dollars.

§ 4. The said corporation shall possess the general powers, and be subject to the general restrictions and liabilities prescribed in the third title of the eighteenth chapter of the first part of the Revised Statutes.

§ 5. The Legislature may at any time alter or repeal this act.

§ 6. This act shall take effect immediately.

By a special Act of the Legislature, passed March 29th, 1883, the Association was authorized to hold real estate to the value of three hundred thousand dollars. This was superseded by the general Corporation Law, under which the Association is entitled to hold real estate to the value of three million dollars.

ARTICLE I

THIS Association shall be composed of authors, artists, and amateurs of letters and the fine arts.

ARTICLE II

§ 1. The officers shall be a President, two Vice-Presidents, a Secretary, and a Treasurer; and there shall also be sixteen Trustees. Such officers, together with the Trustees, shall be a Board of Management. Of the Trustees not less than three shall be authors, not less than three artists, and not more than eight amateurs. No person shall be eligible as a trustee for more than three years in succession.

The officers and trustees shall be chosen at each annual meeting by ballot, and shall continue in office until the next annual meeting, or until their successors are elected.

§ 2. The President shall preside at the meetings of the Association; he shall also be Chairman of the Board of Management; he shall, with the Secretary, sign all written contracts and obligations of the Association, and he shall perform such other duties as the Board of Management of the Association may assign him.

The First Vice-President, or in his absence the Second Vice-President, shall discharge the duties of the President in case of his absence or during a vacancy in his office.

§ 3. The Secretary shall keep minutes of all meetings of the Association and of the Board of Management; shall notify members of their election, issue notices for all meetings of the Association, and conduct the correspondence and keep the records; which records and correspondence shall be open to the inspection of members at all reasonable times.

§ 4. The Treasurer shall collect and, under the direction of the Board of Management, disburse the funds. He shall report at the monthly meeting in February and oftener if required, on the state of the funds. His accounts shall be audited by a select committee of three, appointed or elected at the monthly meeting next previous to the annual meeting.

In case of the absence, disability, or death of the Treasurer, the President or the Board of Management shall have power to appoint a Treasurer pro tem, to serve during such absence or disability, or, in case of the death of the Treasurer, until the vacancy shall have been filled.

§ 5. Any officer or trustee may be removed, for cause, at any meeting of the Association, upon due notice, and any vacancy in an office shall be filled for the residue of the term by the Board of Management.

ARTICLE III

Of the Powers of the Association at its General Meetings

§ 1. All the corporate powers remain vested in the Association, and they may be exercised at any regular meeting, subject to the restrictions herein contained.

§ 2. No resolution making any disposition by way of sale, lease, or mortgage, of any of the property of the Association, or whereby an expenditure of more than two hundred and fifty dollars is or may be incurred, shall be passed except at a meeting at which sixty members shall be present, and two-thirds of those present shall vote in favor thereof, nor until the resolution shall have been referred to and considered by the Board of Management and they shall have reported their opinion thereon, which report shall be made at the monthly meeting next after the reference.

ARTICLE IV

Of the Board of Management

§ 1. The Board of Management shall have general charge of the affairs, funds, and property of the Association. It shall be their duty to carry out the objects and purposes thereof; and to this end they may exercise all the powers of the Association, subject to the Constitution and By-Laws, and to such action as the Association may take at its monthly or annual meetings.

§ 2. The Board of Management shall have regular meetings as often as once in each month from November to June inclusive, and they shall submit a report of the affairs of the Association at each annual meeting, and shall report at other times if required. Seven members shall constitute a quorum.

§ 3. The Board of Management may invite distinguished strangers visiting the City to partake of the privileges of the Association during their stay. [Amended December 3, 1921.]

§ 4. The Board of Management shall have the power to remit the dues of any member, for such cause and for such period as in their judgment may be advisable and proper. During that period such member shall not be counted in the limitation of members. [Amended December 3, 1921.]

ARTICLE V

Of Committees and their Duties

§ 1. Committee on Admissions. The Committee on Admissions shall consist of twenty-one members, who shall be chosen by ballot at the annual meeting, and shall hold office until their successors shall be elected. At the annual meeting in January, 1889, seven members of the Committee shall be elected to serve three years, seven two years, and seven one year. At each subsequent annual meeting seven members shall be chosen to serve three years. No member of the Committee shall be eligible for re-election within one year of the expiration of three years' service on said Committee. Vacancies by death, or otherwise, may be filled by the Committee until the next annual meeting. They shall fix their own time and place of meeting. Eleven members shall constitute a quorum.

§ 2. Other Committees. There shall be a House Committee and a Committee on Literature, each composed of three members of the Board of Management. There shall be an Art Committee composed of at least seven members, of whom at least three shall be members of the Board of Management. These Committees shall be appointed by the Board of Management within two weeks after each annual meeting. The Board may provide for the appointment of additional members of any of said Committees from time to time; such additional members need not be members of the Board. The particular duties of each of said Committees shall be defined by the By-Laws. [Amended March 3, 1934.]

ARTICLE VI

Of the Members

§ 1. The number of resident members is limited to one thousand. [Amended February 6, 1892.]

§ 2. Any member who, having paid the entrance fee and the dues for one year, is absent from the United States for a continuous period of not less than twelve months shall, during his absence, be exempt from the payment of dues, provided that he shall have given to the Treasurer previous notice in writing of his intention to be absent. Absentees shall not be counted in the limitation of the number of resident members. In case the return of absentees shall increase the number above the limit prescribed, no new resident members shall be chosen until the number shall be reduced by resignation or otherwise below such limit.

§ 3. There shall also be a class of non-resident members, not exceeding seven hundred in number, to consist of persons residing permanently more than fifty miles from New York City Hall, and having no office or place of business in New York. [Amended March 1, 1945.]

All members of the Armed Forces of the United States, who are now members or who may be elected to membership, may at their option be held to be non-resident members during their active service. [Amended March 1, 1945.]

An artist member who has paid an entrance fee as a resident member may at his option elect to be classified as a non-resident member and be liable for annual dues as such but shall remain entitled to all the privileges of the Association, including the right of voting and of holding office. [Amended April 3, 1947.]

§ 4. No person shall be admitted as a member of the Association unless he shall have been recommended by the Committee on Admissions, on the proposal of two members not belonging to that Committee.

The name of every person proposed for admission, whether as a resident or a non-resident member, with his residence and the names of the members proposing him, shall be posted in the rooms at least fifteen days before being acted upon by the Committee. The Committee shall receive and consider all communications in reference to the persons proposed, and make careful examination as to their qualifications; it shall pass upon each name separately, and two negative votes shall be a rejection of the candidate. The proceedings of the Committee shall be secret and confidential.

At every monthly meeting of the Association the Committee shall furnish printed lists, properly classified, of the names of the persons recommended for admission, not exceeding twenty in number, and the Association shall then proceed to vote by depositing the lists with tellers appointed by the Chairman. The erasure from the list of any name shall be considered a vote in the negative. If negative votes be cast against any candidate to the number of one-fifth of the votes cast, his candidacy shall be referred back to the Committee on Admissions for further consideration. If the candidacy of such person again comes before the Association, negative votes cast against such person to the number of one-fifth of the votes cast shall exclude him from membership. [Amended January 8, 1953.]

No person so excluded shall be eligible for election within twelve months thereafter.

§ 5. Non-resident members may at any time, on and after the 30th April, 1896, be transferred from the list of resident members upon application in writing to the Treasurer. The members so transferred shall not be entitled to reimbursement of any part of the entrance fee. [Amended February 1896.]

Non-resident members shall be entitled to all the privileges of the Association, except the right of voting and of holding office. They shall be subject to the Constitution and By-Laws and to all the regulations of the Association.

§ 6. The Secretary and Treasurer, two weeks previous to each monthly meeting, shall determine the number of vacancies in each class of members and certify the same to the Committee on Admissions.

§ 7. An entrance fee of one hundred and fifty dollars shall be paid by each resident member, and of one hundred dollars by each non-resident member.

Such payment shall be made within thirty days after notice in writing of his election; or if within thirty days after such notice the member gives written notice to the Treasurer of his desire to do so, such payment may be made in four instalments, each of one quarter of the amount of the entrance fee; the first instalment shall be payable within thirty days after notice of his election, the second instalment within six months after such notice, the third instalment within twelve months after such notice, and the fourth instalment within eighteen months after such notice.

In default of such payment of the entrance fee, or the first instalment thereof, within thirty days after such notice, the member shall be deemed to have declined his election unless the Board of Management determines otherwise.

If any member fails to pay a subsequent instalment of his entrance fee when due, he shall be notified thereof in writing, and unless such instalment shall be paid within one month after such notice he shall thereupon cease to be a member unless the Board of Management determines otherwise. [Amended January 14, 1939.]

§ 8. The annual dues of resident members shall be one hundred twenty-five dollars, payable semi-annually in advance on the first days of May and November; and the annual dues of non-resident members shall be sixty-two and one-half dollars, payable on admission, and on each first day of May thereafter. [Amended March 6, 1947.]

The dues of all newly-elected members shall be computed proportionally from the first day of the month succeeding their election.

When the dues of any member shall remain unpaid for the space of three months, the Treasurer shall cause him to be notified that, unless the same be paid within one month thereafter, his membership will cease; and in case such dues shall not be paid pursuant to such notice, or such default be accounted for to the Board of Management, he shall thereupon cease to be a member.

In case any member of the non-resident class other than an artist member shall come to reside within the radius above named, or shall establish an office or place of business in the City of New York, it shall be his duty forthwith to notify the Treasurer of the Association in writing of such change, and he shall then be deemed a resident member with annual dues accordingly, and unless he has already paid the entrance fee of a resident member, he shall also pay to the Treasurer within thirty days the additional amount of entrance fees necessary to constitute him a resident member; in default of such payment he shall cease to be a member. [Amended March 6, 1947.]

It shall be the duty of each member to keep the Treasurer informed of his address.

§ 9. Honorary members may be elected from the membership of the Association on the recommendation of the Board of Management, at a regular monthly meeting, by an affirmative vote by ballot of not less than nine-tenths of the votes cast. No more than one honorary member shall be chosen in any one year. Honorary members shall be exempt from the payment of annual dues and shall be entitled to all the privileges of the Association except that of holding office. [Amended, April 5, 1956.]

§ 10. Any member may be suspended or expelled for violation of the Constitution or By-Laws, or for any offence or misconduct which may be deemed sufficient to warrant such suspension or expulsion, by a vote, at a monthly meeting, of three-fourths of the members present, one month's previous notice having been given to the member charged. It shall be the duty of the Board of Management to report any member for action under this rule.

The Board of Management shall also have the power for a like cause, by the affirmative vote of eleven (11) of its members, after a hearing has been granted on one month's previous notice, to suspend any member from all privileges as such member indefinitely, pending further action; but any member affected thereby may require the resolution of suspension to be reported to the Association.

Membership may also be forfeited by failure to pay any indebtedness to the Association, in such manner as may be prescribed by the By-Laws.

§ 11. In the rooms of the Association, betting of any kind is strictly prohibited. [Amended November 5, 1927.]

ARTICLE VII

Of Meetings

§ 1. There shall be an annual meeting of the Association for the election of officers and members and other business. It shall be held on the second Thursday of January of each year, at 9 o'clock P.M.

§ 2. There shall be monthly meetings of the Association for the election of members and other business. They shall be held on the first Thursday of November, December, February, March, April, May and June at 9 o'clock P.M. [Amended June 3, 1941.]

§ 3. Special meetings may be called by the Board of Management; and they shall call a meeting at any time on the written request of ten members, which request shall specify the object of the meeting.

§ 4. The number of members necessary to constitute a quorum at an annual meeting shall be fifty, and at a monthly or special meeting shall be thirty.

ARTICLE VIII

Of Amendments

§ 1. This Constitution shall commence and take effect on the second Saturday of January, 1870, and the previous Constitution thereupon shall cease.

§ 2. No alteration or amendment of this Constitution shall be made unless the same be proposed at a previous regular meeting, and then posted in a conspicuous place in the rooms of the Association and the text of the same sent to each voting member with the notice of the meeting at which it may be considered, and be finally adopted at a subsequent meeting by the votes of two-thirds of the members present at the passage thereof.

§ 3. By-Laws, Rules, and Regulations, not inconsistent with the Charter or this Constitution, may be made, adopted, altered, or repealed at any monthly or annual meeting; provided, the proposed by-law, rule, regulation, alteration, or repeal shall have been proposed at a previous monthly meeting, and then posted in a conspicuous place in the rooms of the Association and the text of the same sent to each voting member with the notice of the meeting at which it may be considered, and shall be adopted by the votes of two-thirds of the members present at the passage thereof.

BY-LAWS

§ 1. No book, journal, paper, picture, statue, or other work of art, the property of the Association, shall be taken from the rooms, under any pretext whatever, except by authority of the Board of Management.

§ 2. On the first day of each month or as soon thereafter as may be practicable, there shall be sent to each member notice of his indebtedness to the Association on the last day of the preceding month, and if the same is not paid on or before the fifteenth day of the month the names of the members so in default, together with the amounts due, shall be posted on a separate sheet in the hall.

In case any such indebtedness shall not be discharged at the expiration of a month from the date of such first notice, a second notice shall be mailed to the member in default, notifying him that further credit will not be extended to him until his indebtedness is discharged, and that in case he continues in such default for ten days thereafter, he will be excluded from all privileges of the Association until such indebtedness is paid, and such member shall thereupon, upon the expiration of such ten days, be so excluded, and notice to that effect shall thereupon be posted on a separate sheet in the hall.

At any time during such exclusion the Board of Management may declare the membership of such delinquent to be forfeited, and his name shall thereupon be dropped from the roll of members.

But before such action shall be taken by the Board of Management, it shall cause a copy of this By-Law to be mailed to the delinquent member.

A copy of this By-Law shall be sent with such second notice.

§ 3. A suggestion book shall be kept at the rooms in which every member is authorized to enter, under his signature, any complaint as to the management of the Association, and any suggestions he may desire to make.

§ 4. Visitors:

(a) A member may introduce a guest to the rooms of the Association for one day by entering the name and address of such guest and the date in the book to be kept for that purpose. This privilege may be suspended for any particular day by the House Committee. A member may not introduce the same person as a daily guest more than twice in the calendar year, and may not introduce more than one daily guest on the same day.

(b) A member may invite visitors to the Art Gallery during any Art Exhibition of the Association through signing cards of invitation printed for that purpose, but such cards of invitation shall not entitle visitors to pass to other parts of the house.

(c) A member may introduce guests to the private dining room when he has reserved that room for an entertainment.

(d) The House Committee, at the request in writing of a member, may extend the privileges of the Association for a total period of one month in any twelve months to a guest whose residence is more than fifty miles from the City Hall. Extension of this time may, on the recommendation of the House Committee, be granted by the Board of Management.

A member may not obtain from the House Committee such privileges for more than one guest at a time, nor for the same guest more than once in a period of twelve months. Guest privileges extended by the House Committee or on its recommendation may be terminated at the discretion of the Committee at any time. [Amended May 6, 1954.]

(e) Guests while enjoying the privileges of the Association as provided in paragraphs (a) and (d) are on the same footing as non-resident members, except that they may not introduce visitors and may not be present at any business meeting of the Association. Nor shall the House Committee grant the same privileges to the same guest more than once in a period of twelve months.

(f) A member who obtains admission to the club-house for a guest becomes responsible for the conduct of such guest and for any indebtedness of such guest to the Association.

(g) The Board of Management may modify these rules to meet special cases.

(h) It is the duty of the House Committee to enforce the provisions of this section and promptly to report to the Board of Management all cases of persistent violation thereof.

(i) In case of violation of any of the provisions of this section, the House Committee may summarily suspend the privileges accorded therein with regard to any member or visitor for a period not exceeding ten days, and in all cases of violation the Board of Management may suspend such privileges for such period as in their discretion the interest of the Association may require.

(j) In addition to the powers herein above granted, the Board of Management may provide for the invitation of authors, artists, and composers of music to be guests of the Association.

Such invitations shall be for the term of one year but shall be renewable; and the total number so invited shall not exceed fifty at any one time. [Amended November 5, 1942.]

§ 5. The House Committee shall have the charge of furnishing supplies, employing stewards and servants, keeping the rooms and premises of the Association in order for use, regulating the place, character and the extent of recreation and amusements in the club-house, and enforcing the rule as to admission of visitors. [Amended November 5, 1927.]

The care of newspapers and current periodicals is entrusted to the House Committee.

§ 6. The Committee on Literature shall have charge of the Library, and of the supply of books, and shall subscribe for periodicals and newspapers. Loud or continuous conversation shall not be carried on in the Library, nor, except on Thursday nights, shall refreshments be served therein.

§ 7. The Committee on Art shall have charge of all works of art owned or possessed by the Association; and it shall be their duty to make arrangements for exhibition, at monthly and annual meetings, of the works of artists of the Association, and other works of art, at their discretion. They shall keep a catalogue of the works of art owned or possessed by the Association, or exhibited in its rooms, and shall record therein every such work, with the name of the author, the title of the work, and the time of exhibition. The Committee on Art shall have charge of all decorations of the rooms. No work of art shall be accepted as a gift, or purchased by the Association, until the Committee on Art has made a report thereon to the Board of Management.

§ 8. The expenditures of the House Committee, and the Committees on Literature and Art, shall be limited to such sums as the Board of Management shall prescribe.

§ 9. A perfect list of members, officers, and committees shall be kept posted up in the rooms of the Association; and such list shall be corrected under the direction of the Treasurer and Secretary, from time to time, as changes occur.

§ 10. The above By-Laws shall go into effect on the second Saturday of January, 1870.

§ 11. A Nominating Committee shall annually be constituted as follows. The Board of Management shall at its last spring meeting propose as candidates for such committee the names of seven members of the Club, of whom two shall be members of the Board of Management, not eligible for re-election, and two shall be members of the Committee on Admissions. The names shall be posted in the club-house at least twenty days before the November monthly meeting of the Club. At any time not later than ten days before the November monthly meeting, additional candidates may be proposed for the Committee, provided that in each case the proposal, indorsed by twenty-five resident members, be presented in writing to the Secretary of the Club. [Amended May 1, 1952.]

All the names proposed by either of the above methods shall be printed in a single list, the names proposed by the Board of Management being designated by an asterisk. From this list, which shall be distributed at the monthly meeting in November, the Club shall elect by ballot the Nominating Committee. Each member may vote for not more than seven names on the list, and the seven candidates receiving the highest number of votes shall be declared elected. [Amended May 1, 1952.]

The Nominating Committee shall at the earliest practicable moment post in the club-house the names of candidates for all the positions to be filled. Additional candidates for such positions or any of them, may be nominated, and shall be posted, provided that in each case the nomination, indorsed by fifty resident members, be presented in writing to the Secretary of the Club not later than one week before the Annual Meeting.

The Secretary of the Club shall prepare printed lists of all candidates named by either of the aforesaid methods, the names to be grouped under the titles of the positions to be filled; the candidates for Trustees to be arranged in three groups, designated respectively as Authors, Artists, and Amateurs, and all names proposed by the Nominating Committee to be designated by an asterisk. These lists shall be distributed to members at the Annual Meeting, and shall serve as ballots in the election, provided that nothing herein be construed to restrict the right of any member to vote by means of written names for persons whose names do not appear in print.

§ 12. An Investment Committee consisting of four members and the Treasurer shall be appointed by the Board of Management annually. It shall be the duty of this committee to supervise the investments of the Club and to advise the Treasurer with respect to the purchase and sale of its investments.

REQUIREMENTS OF THE COMMITTEE ON ADMISSIONS

FOR the guidance of members of the Association, the Year-Book contains the Requirements of the Committee and the extract from the Committee's minutes concerning the interpretation of "amateurs of letters and the fine arts."

With respect to letters concerning candidates, the members of the Association are requested to send to the Committee such information, whether favorable or unfavorable, as they feel will assist in the consideration of a candidate. Article I of the Constitution declares: "This Association shall be composed of authors, artists, and amateurs of letters and the fine arts." The mere endorsement of a name is of little help to the Committee in determining whether a candidate, whatever his vocation, has such breadth of interest and qualities of mind as would make him a sympathetic, stimulating, and congenial companion in such a society.

Members are requested not to propose, second, or endorse more than one candidate in any one letter.

All communications are confidential. After final action has been taken on a candidate, letters unfavorable to him are returned to their writers by registered mail. The letters of proposers and seconders are deposited in the archives, and all other letters are destroyed, except that, by a two-thirds vote of the Committee, any particular letter may be preserved in the archives. "The proceedings of the Committee shall be secret and confidential." (Constitution, Article VI)

REQUIREMENTS OF THE COMMITTEE

1. The proposer must write to the Committee, stating the name, address, and qualifications of the candidate. The letter should convey definite information as to the candidate's background, vocation, attainments, character, and personality. If he is not an artist or an author, it should also give evidence as to those interests and tastes outside of his vocation which would make him a sympathetic, stimulating, and congenial companion in a society of artists and authors.
2. The seconder must also write to the Committee in regard to the candidate. The letter should contain information of a character similar to that outlined for the proposer's letter.
3. The name, address, and vocation * of the candidate shall be entered in the Candidates' Book, preferably by the proposer and seconder, with their signatures. The Secretary of the Committee may make such entry when the letters of recommendation have been received from both proposer and seconder. A candidacy is not completed until these letters have been received and the entry has been made.
4. The candidate must be known to at least two members of the Committee if he is a candidate for resident membership or to at least one member if he is a candidate for non-resident membership. To facilitate the introduction of candidates to members of the Committee, proposers and seconders are asked to get in touch with the Chairman of the Sub-Committee to which the candidate has been assigned.

* The Committee on Admissions has long interpreted the term "amateur" as relating to "breadth of interest and qualities of mind and imagination" rather than to "occupation." It therefore suggests to proposers that in filling the space (in the Candidates' Book) designated "occupation," they use some term other than "amateur" to describe the candidate's "profession or occupation," in compliance with Rule I of the Committee, as adopted by the Association.

5. The Committee must receive, in addition to the letters of the proposer and seconder, at least ten letters from other members of the Association concerning a candidate for resident membership or at least six letters concerning a candidate for non-resident membership. These letters should do more than merely endorse a candidate; they should contain information which will be a source of enlightenment to the Committee as to the candidate's qualifications.

"AMATEURS OF LETTERS AND THE FINE ARTS"

[From the Minutes of the Committee on Admissions, January 23, 1923]

Your special Committee appointed to consider the difficulties that have lately developed within the Admissions Committee over the interpretation of the word "amateur" in Article I of the Constitution, and to report on a suggestion that Article I should be amended, has made inquiries, has considered, and now reports.

We find that for more than sixty years the Committee on Admissions has been guided in passing upon qualifications of candidates not by such a narrow interpretation of the words "amateurs of letters and the fine arts" as would have required candidates to be experts or connoisseurs, but rather by the view that those words as used in the Constitution were intended to admit gentlemen of any occupation provided their breadth of interest and qualities of mind and imagination made them sympathetic, stimulating, and congenial companions in a society of authors and artists. We believe that this construction has long been clearly expressed through the Century's membership, and that the Admissions Committee may now regard it as being sanctioned and established by long usage and tradition. Consequently, we also think that the Admissions Committee need not hesitate to govern itself accordingly, and need not call upon the Club to undertake the difficult task of formulating a precise definition of the word "amateur."

On the other hand, we see no reason why it should not be admitted here that the Admissions Committee has erred in particular cases. It seems better to recognize this than to let anyone suppose that mistakes are to be accepted as precedents for a lax standard. This is stated because confusion has lately resulted from just that supposition.

The Admissions Committee should make it clear to all its members that it intends to interpret "amateur" very broadly, but never to interpret it so loosely as to cover candidates who do not clearly possess what may be called a responsible sympathy with letters and the fine arts, no matter how eminent or successful they may be, no matter how respectable socially, or how deserving of recognition on special grounds. It is understood that the writer of a technical treatise is not such an "author" as the Constitution intends; similarly, a mere collector, no matter how untiring, might well stand outside our broadest interpretations of "amateur." We do not want spiritual mediocrity. Our standard is obviously hard to define. But if the word "culture" did not sound priggish to some ears, it would perhaps suggest most briefly what the Century requires of a candidate quite apart from any special kind of ability or success.

BY THE HISTORIAN

William George Russell Allen

Russell Allen graduated from Harvard in 1903; thereafter for eighteen years he devoted himself to being a businessman, occupying himself with railroads, banking, movies, mining, and various other enterprises. Then he saw a great light. He became, first interested, then wholly engrossed, in prints and woodcuts, and he began a truly remarkable collection of chiaroscuro and early prints by Holbein, Dürer and Rembrandt.

Paul Sachs tells a story of Allen: "Although he had long shown an interest in the field in which he was a leader, the opportunity for a real start came in the spring of 1922 when he acquired, at one fell swoop, the best of the graphic work in one of the most famous European collections. William M. Ivins, Jr., and I are not likely to forget the day when, at the Hotel Royal in Paris, Allen spread out on his bed before our incredulous eyes the 'loot' that he had just 'pulled in.' We had all three—Ivins, Allen, and I—been attending an auction sale in Paris where Daumiers had come up for sale. As we left the auction room, Allen asked casually whether we would like to see a lot of Schongauers, Dürers, and Rembrandts. With the kind of irritating condescension for which initiated collectors are notorious in the presence of a novice, we 'graciously' agreed to have a look, wondering the while how badly the poor fellow had had his leg pulled. First we gasped; then we threw up our hands and admitted his amazing triumph. Allen spread out before us no less than fifty Rembrandt etchings of superb quality—including an impression of The Three Trees, as fine in quality as any extant impression—not to mention twenty-odd Dürers and a similar number of Schongauers, all of them the choicest examples of their kind. He had purchased them en bloc. Our respect for the 'novice' increased when Allen told us that he had a one-year option on the balance of that collection, which included the Pollaiuolo Battle of Nude Men, in the right kind of an impression, and other fifteenth-century Italians by such giants as Mantegna. The next spring he exercised his option."

Allen traveled all over Europe looking for prints, and in his apartment in Boston he had probably the finest collection of etchings and woodcuts in any private hands. He was a Trustee of the Boston Museum of Fine Arts, and one of the founders of the Boston Museum of Modern Art. His escape from the bondage of business into this realm of art—of critics, curators, artists, and the great treasures of the Western World—was as exciting as Keats's looking into Chapman's Homer; and he thought so himself. "Viewed with a touch of perspective," he said, "all these scurryings about seem a little ant-like: Beauty is truth, truth beauty—that is all . . . ye need to know."

Oswald Theodore Avery

Oswald T. Avery was born in Halifax, in 1877. At the age of ten he came to New York, and here he lived until his retirement from work in 1948. The last few years of his life were spent in Nashville, Tennessee.

He received an A.B. degree from Colgate University in 1900, and an M.D. degree from the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Columbia University in 1904. After a short early career in clinical medicine and in bacteriological research at the Hoagland Laboratory in Brooklyn, he spent the remainder of his working life at the Rockefeller Institute in the City. His devotion to science and his singleness of purpose were unique and admitted of few outside interests or distractions. He became one of the most distinguished bacteriologists of his time, and the broad significance of his work was recognized throughout the world. He was one of the founders of the modern science of immuno-chemistry, and his contribution to the science of genetics was of singular importance to workers in that field.

The importance of Avery's scientific discoveries was widely recognized and acclaimed both in this country and abroad. Among other honors, he received the award of the Passano Foundation of Baltimore in 1949 for his success in isolating pneumonia germs and classifying the disease into four types, and the Kober Medal from the Association of American Physicians in 1947; and in 1944 he was made a foreign member of the Royal Society of London.

Avery was a true scientist with an insatiable curiosity and urge to discover the innermost mechanisms of the biological facts that came under his observation. His approach to the solution of a problem was characterized by a logical simplicity of thought and a perfection of technical procedure combined with complete objectivity that guaranteed the soundness of his deductions.

Most of his associations were with his colleagues, by whom he was greatly revered and to whom he was known familiarly as "Fess," a truly lovable person, humble, disinterested, and generous. A tribute to his inspiration, stimulation, and the friendly quality of his leadership is the host of former associates who occupy distinguished positions in medical bacteriology in this country today and who cherish his memory with a lasting devotion that is exceptional in professional life.

Charles Peter Berkey

Charles P. Berkey graduated from the University of Minnesota in 1893 and took his Ph.D. there in 1897. He was a geologist, but he was also a pioneer in engineering geology. In 1903 he came to teach at Columbia, and eventually he became Newberry Professor and head of the geology department. He would take groups of students on field trips—usually on some holiday—tramping the Hudson Highlands, or cross-sectioning the geological formations of nearby New Jersey. They would take lunch on some outcrop of which he spoke as familiarly as though he had been midwife at its birth ten million years ago.

He personally inspected and blessed the foundation of every great dam built by the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation—and these are the greatest dams in the world. He also worked for the City on the Catskill and Delaware Aqueduct projects. When an engineering firm prepared to bid $11,000,000 for a 37,000-foot long diameter section of the Catskill Aqueduct, they called up Berkey the night before the bid was entered and said: "We must know how many linear feet of that tunnel is bed-rock."

"One thousand feet," was the correct answer, made without deliberation.

His advice was also sought on many of the great engineering projects of the time, including the George Washington Bridge, the Lincoln Tunnel, the Whitestone Bridge, the Kill Van Kull Bridge, and others. He went to the Gobi Desert with the expedition when the dinosaur eggs were found, and there uncovered a mass of new and most interesting geological history.

There is a camaraderie among geologists. The calling is obviously no road to riches; the common interest in poking about in the earth's crust and speculating about it provides a basis for brotherhood that is one of the satisfactions of the job. All the other geologists liked Berkey and respected him. His students thought he was wonderful. And he himself was happy and engrossed in his work, so that the range of the mountains was his pasture and the barren land became his dwelling.

Riccardo Bertelli

Riccardo Bertelli was born in Genoa and graduated from the University of Turin. He came to America in 1901 to establish an art bronze works. He jokingly used to refer to the fact that originally he did not intend to work very hard, and he enjoyed life to the full; but when he started his foundry he found that the work was very difficult indeed, and he put up a sign saying, "R. B. WORKS," (his own initials) to show his friends how serious his intentions were. The initials later developed into the Roman Bronze Works, Inc. His first foundry was right across from the Metropolitan Opera, and, between Scotti, and Caruso, and the Italian singers, and the artists, he was just as busy as he could be.

In 1911 Miss Ida Conquest, then aged twenty-eight and the most popular actress on the American stage, announced that she was going to marry "Cavalier Riccardo Bertelli of Genoa," and, to the despair of half a hundred discarded aspirants, she did so; and they lived happily ever after.

Bertelli made a very important contribution in the world of sculpture by bringing over Italian craftsmen and introducing to this country the special form of foundry work known as the "lost wax" method. Some of the men he brought over are still at work in the same foundry today. He was also gay and optimistic about taking chances with penniless sculptors (like Malvina Hoffman, to whom he gave a good send-off) and casting their work so that the public could really see it and come to know about them.

He lived in Rome these last ten years, where lived also his daughter and his grandson (his wife died in 1937). His life there was pleasant and a good deal easier than in New York. Friendly sculptors used to stop in and see him, and they found him as animated and amusing as ever. He was a highly civilized person, much-traveled in the realms of gold and many goodly kingdoms he had seen.

George Francis Booth

George F. Booth was born in Hartford and educated in the public schools there. He was an editor and publisher, and in 1900 he bought the Worcester Gazette, when that newspaper had a circulation of only a few thousand. Earlier, when he was still in his twenties, he had been general manager of the New Haven Register.

After a series of mergers, the circulation of the Gazette rose to more than 150,000. In a separate corporation Booth operated the radio station WTAG. He was a charter member of the Associated Press when it was reorganized in 1900 and served as a director of it from 1941 to 1950.

George Booth was a good New England Republican, and interested in everything that was going on. He never held public office, and never wanted to, but he was a delegate to the Republican National Convention in 1924, 1936, and 1944, and in 1932 he was chairman of the Massachusetts delegation. In the City of Worcester he was a main pillar of the community, serving as trustee of the Fine Arts Museum, the Worcester Polytechnic Institute, Worcester Academy, and the Memorial Hospital, and heading or working at a dozen other civic activities.

He had a pleasant, homely face, and his talk was tinctured with the whimsical pessimism of the native Yankee. Williams gave him an honorary degree in 1929—surely the most generally popular investiture in the history of the College. All Worcester rejoiced.

Booth lived a long time. He worked hard for the people of his city, and his fellow citizens had confidence in him and held him in honor; and where he led, they followed.

Donald Clifford Brace

Donald Brace graduated from Columbia in 1904. So did Alfred Harcourt. Together, upon graduation, they entered the publishing house of Henry Holt & Co. Mr. Holt was very much around. He was an elder statesman entirely familiar with the works of Peter Parley but distrustful of modern psychiatry. Harcourt and Brace worked hard for (and over) Mr. Holt, but in the end, his character was too rugged for them; so they started a publishing house of their own, Harcourt, Brace & Co.

In the course of thirty years they published books by Sinclair Lewis, Dorothy Canfield, Carl Sandburg, J. M. Keynes, Bertrand Russell, and a score of other first-class writers. It was great fun, and no accident—publishers cannot wait till authors knock on their door; they must go out and put the wretches to work, they must lend them money, tell them what is going on in the world, listen to their tales of woe, and keep them interested.

At all this Brace was supremely good, not because he was slick or plausible, but because he was wise and understanding and exceedingly competent. Authors reposed complete confidence in him, and he never let them down. He looked after the serial rights and the movie rights and all the collateral matters involved in publishing a successful novel, and he saw to it that the publisher and the author were properly protected.

He had rather a difficult task sometimes with neurotic prima donnas. He was calling on an English author in a very luxurious living room that had a deep-piled carpet when a large cat came into the room and started to walk around the author's chair. After several of the cat's circumnavigations, the author sprang up and put the cat out remarking, "I can't bear cats stomping about."

Brace retired in 1949, and after that spent most of his time at Riverside, Connecticut, where he had a very pleasant house. In 1950 he received the Columbia University Medal for Excellence in recognition of his contribution to the field of publishing. He had a good life filled with satisfactions. He worked hard and successfully at an employment that interested him enormously and paid him enough.

Seest thou a man diligent in his business? He shall stand before kings.

Hartwell Cabell

Hartwell Cabell was born in Nelson County, Virginia. He graduated from Urbana University and from the Cincinnati Law School, and commenced the practice of law in Cincinnati. At the turn of the century he came to New York, and practised here in the City for nearly fifty years. In the summer he used to live at New Canaan and commute into town.

He was descended from Dr. William Cabell, who settled in Virginia in 1725, and his home, Edgewood, on the James River, was one of the most famous of the early Virginia residences. Some ten years ago Cabell retired from law practice, and went back to live at Edgewood; and there he died at the age of ninety-two.

He was a big man, with a great shock of white hair and a pleasant, resonant voice. Everybody knew him down town, and for a generation he was a familiar and conspicuous figure there. He specialized in insurance law and was thoroughly competent in his field; but he was also an accomplished amateur pianist and an active member of the Beethoven Society.

He was a Virginia gentleman, and he liked it very much. He used to import to the City a peculiar drink, made on his plantation, that he generously furnished to his friends for immediate consumption. It was exceedingly stimulating and admirable in every way.

After he retired to Edgwood, we did not see him any more at the Club; but he is still associated with pleasant memories of a friendly companion and a kind and understanding heart.

Harry Woodburn Chase

Harry Woodburn Chase was Eighth Chancellor of New York University. He graduated from Dartmouth in 1904 and took a Ph.D. from Clark University in 1910. From 1919 to 1930 he was President of the University of North Carolina, from 1930 to 1933 President of the University of Illinois, and from 1933 Chancellor of New York University until he retired in 1951.

Thirty-two years is a long time to be a university president, and Chase was at the wheel during some stormy weather. He went to North Carolina during the First World War and steered the University through the astonishing and disturbing period of change in the 1920s. He left it the most progressive and vigorous institution of higher learning in the South.

In New York, while he was Chancellor, there took place the organization and building of the great New York University–Bellevue Medical Centre and the consummated development of Washington Square as the Law Centre for the University. These remarkable accomplishments were achieved while the country was successively wallowing in a financial depression and involved in the Second World War.

Chase was an exceedingly skilful administrator. He not only knew exactly what he wanted to do and how to go about it, but he captured and held the loyalty of his faculty and the confidence of his trustees to an extraordinary degree. The fact is he minded his own business and got through it in good order, and he expected everyone else to do likewise; and they usually did. This system saved him so much time that he gave an impression of being leisurely and unhurried.

He was a tall, handsome man, with a ruddy color extending over his bald head. His eyeballs protruded and were ever alert, not only in their natural orbit, but also at an angle of 45 degrees, right and left, without the turn of his head. His clothes fitted him; he talked with a certain preciseness; he bore himself with a natural dignity; and he was good fun withal, could be counted on to contribute his share of provocative remarks, and knew very well what he was talking about.

To be a good administrator is to deliver one's fellow-workers from the gratuitous frustrations of faulty organization and the exasperations of vacillating leadership; to the four thousand members of his faculty Harry Chase brought freedom from the ills that flow from sloth and complacency in high places.

Clement Biddle Penrose Cobb

Clement Cobb graduated from Williams in 1922 and from the Harvard Medical School in 1926. After an internship at Presbyterian Hospital, he became a resident physician at Babies Hospital; from that time he devoted his attention to children and eventually came to be one of the outstanding pediatricians of the City.

His success with children was astonishing. His technique seemed almost a black art. He appeared to carry with him an aura, and when he approached a child the little one would relax and grow calm. At his funeral the church was filled with attractive young mothers who paid grateful tribute for what he had done for their offspring.

After children, his great interest was birds. He was a bird-watcher. He would get up at dawn and hide for hours in an uncomfortable blind while he studied birds; and in this quaint pursuit he traveled all over the land, from the Jersey marshes to the great swamps of Florida.

Children and birds are good to be interested in. They make for happiness and calm. Cobb's tall figure, his cheerful kindly manner, and his friendliness were outward and visible signs of inward and spiritual peace.

Charles William Colby

Charles W. Colby graduated from McGill University and took the A.M. at Harvard in 1889 and the Ph.D. in 1890. He was born and raised in Canada and lived most of his life at Montreal, except for some ten years he spent in New York. In 1917 his father died. Colby, then fifty years old, was head of the history department at McGill and probably the most learned man in the world concerning the early history of Canada.

He secured a year's leave from the University to attend to the winding-up of his father's affairs; but he found it would take much longer than that, so he resigned his history chair and plunged into business. He took various items in his father's estate and developed them into going and profitable concerns, notably the Noiseless Typewriter Company, which he, single-handed, nursed into an exceedingly successful enterprise, selling it eventually to Remington Rand. This made him quite rich, but it tied him close to commerce and he never got back to teaching.

Colby had a gay and glamorous life. He lived at Montreal, where he was revered as a most remarkably learned man and one of the first citizens of the place; but he found it necessary to come frequently to New York to attend meetings, and these trips always included looking up old friends and cronies and visiting with them, unmindful of the pressures of time and tide. Twice he was invited to be the Principal of McGill (he was long one of the Board of Governors), but he would not accept, saying that he preferred to be a professor emeritus rather than an administrator in educational circles. He was a true son of the Eastern Townships, whose people combine the sturdy qualities of New England with rugged and indomitable Canadianism. He kept the flavor of the international boundary, and he contributed more Canadian members to the Club than everyone else combined.

His vigor, to the end of his eighty-eight years, was a matter of astonishment to his juniors, and he was never alarmed by the proposals or the performance of younger men.

Frederic René Coudert

Frederic R. Coudert was born in New York, the son of the founder of the law firm of Coudert Brothers. He graduated from Columbia in 1890 and from the Columbia Law School the following year, and took up law practice in his father's office. They had a branch in Paris and important French clients, and there was an international atmosphere about the firm that lent it distinction. Frederic was for a time, during the First World War, legal adviser to the British Embassy, and he represented the British Crown in the famous Public Trustee Cases. He also acted as Special Assistant to the Attorney General and argued important appeals before the Supreme Court.

In 1916, just before the war, Coudert toured this country with Henry L. Stimson to speak for preparedness. After the peace he championed the idea of American membership in the League of Nations, and urged it earnestly. He also advocated the repeal of prohibition. In 1940 he was one of the original members of the Committee to Defend America by Aiding the Allies. He was always a good partisan and made no secret of where his sympathies lay.

This frankness was a very engaging quality of Coudert's. He got around fast and knew everybody interesting or important in Paris, Washington, and New York. He belonged to an astonishing number of clubs in all three cities, and perhaps these served to keep him in touch with the huge circle of his acquaintances. He was not a learned jurist or a particularly effective advocate, but he was exceedingly resourceful in getting things done, and he was full of ideas, suggestions, and provocative questions that made him a stimulating companion and a useful adviser.

As old age came on, he took to spending the winters in Florida, and he would reappear in the City burnt by the sun like a blackamoor. He would come to meetings at the Club and sit down in front with his hearing aid, his bright eyes gleaming, nodding his wise, bald head, and looking about him with eager, bird-like movements. Thus he grew old as he had lived, walking uprightly and speaking the truth from his heart.

Harry Alonzo Cushing

Harry Cushing graduated from Amherst in 1891 and took M.A., LL.B., and Ph.D. degrees at Columbia, where he commenced teaching history and law in 1895. At the same time he practised law in the City, retiring only some fifteen years ago.

He was Acting Dean of the Columbia Law School and professor of criminal law there in 1909, when he resigned because of a disagreement in methods. The incident attracted wide attention at the time; but the only permanent result was that Cushing gave up teaching, and devoted himself to law practice and research in American history. In this latter he was interested and very competent, and he published various historical essays and edited the works of Samuel Adams.

Cushing was an able jurist, and a historian of considerable gifts. He kept getting diverted from the library to the market place, where he was rather too passionate to be effective. He was handicapped by a deformity of the feet that made walking difficult, and sometimes it seemed as though this acerbated a disposition naturally somewhat choleric.

Of later years he was confined to a sanitarium; but fifteen years ago he was at the Club a great deal—especially in the evening—and he was first-class company, lively, informed, and convivial.

John William Davis

John W. Davis was born in Clarksburg, West Virginia. He went to school in Charlottesville, and graduated from Washington and Lee University in 1892 and from the Law School there in 1895.

His father was one of the leaders of the Clarksburg bar, and when John was admitted to practice, he came home and asked his father for a job. The old man slipped a sheet of paper in his typewriter and wrote: "Davis & Davis"—this was the only partnership agreement they ever had.

With his father, John rode circuit all through the eastern counties of West Virginia. Long after—when he was the first lawyer of the realm—he said: "Whatever professional success I have had is due primarily to the training I got in the rough and tumble of the Clarksburg bar. It was sometimes rough and, as I look back, I did a good deal of tumbling; but it was a healthy discipline."

In 1913 President Wilson appointed him Solicitor General, and in the course of five years he argued for the government sixty-eight cases before the Supreme Court. The Justices considered him the best advocate who ever appeared before the Court. His method was simple and unvaried. He explained the issue, and then proceeded, unhurried, to present the facts. He did this as though he were telling a story, and the relevancy of the facts to the issue was clearly apparent to anybody. If his case had a weak spot, he mentioned it himself (without fail) and disposed of it as if it were an adventitious item of casual interest. When he came to the law, he developed one point, and only one—his strongest. Then he sat down.

All this he did without raising his voice or clenching his fist or giving any outward and visible sign of passion. The story seemed to flow out of him without hesitation—effortless, colloquial, educated, unadorned. The most complicated transactions became simple and comprehensible. The curious consequences of human error appeared inevitable and excusable.

The case Davis probably cared the most about, he lost:

United States v. Macintosh. This involved a Baptist minister, born in Canada, who became a member of the faculty at Yale. Macintosh applied to the District Court in New Haven to be naturalized and thereupon was subjected to a catechism possibly appropriate for an initiation to a junior high school fraternity. In the course of the inquisition it developed that there might be circumstances in which Professor Macintosh would refuse to bear arms in time of war, and he refused to bind his conscience by taking an oath. So the Court denied naturalization.

Macintosh then appealed, and Davis was his lawyer. The Court of Appeals (L. Hand and Swan) unanimously reversed and ordered him admitted to citizenship. But it was 1930. Our country was filled with admirers of Mussolini who had "made the trains run on time" and generally improved Italy for tourists. The Government was in the hands of statesmen who were sure that everything was for the best in the best of all possible worlds. The Noble Experiment seethed and stank, and the Administration was accused of cowardice and inertia. So the Government appealed, and all the amateur fascists rejoiced that there was to be no truck with these liberals.

Davis argued the case in the Supreme Court. When he came to describe the conundrums solemnly propounded to the unfortunate Macintosh in the inquisition, he came to a stop, and it was evident that he was in trouble. He looked at the Chief Justice, and the latter smiled at him and moved his hand ever so slightly as if to say, "take your time." He waited a long minute, recovered himself and then went on to the end.

The Supreme Court voted 5 to 4 against him. But Chief Justice Hughes wrote the dissent, in which Holmes, Brandeis, and Stone joined, and it rang through the country like a clarion.

In the Palais de Justice in Paris, by the entrance to the Salle des Pas Perdus, is a monument to Malesherbes. Davis stood in front of it and said to his companion: "This is one of the great advocates of all time. When Louis XVI was haled before the Revolutionary Tribunal in 1793, two prominent lawyers refused to represent him. Thereupon Malesherbes volunteered; he defended the King well and fearlessly, saying it would be unworthy of his high profession were he to falter. So they guillotined the King; and a little later they threw Malesherbes into a tumbrel and guillotined him, too." He regarded the statue in silence; and after a pause, "Sir," he said, "I salute you."

When Davis was running for President, in 1924, it was delicately suggested to him that his chances would be better if he resigned from his law firm, which had the misfortune to be counsel for J. P. Morgan & Co. "Any lawyer," he replied, "who surrenders his independence or shades his duty to his client by trimming his professional course to fit the gusts of popular opinion, in my judgment not only dishonors himself, but disparages and degrades the profession to which he should be proud to belong."

To be in a great Wall Street law office is for the most part to be a clerk, a formulator of agreements, an organizer of order, a compiler of statistics. There are not many forensic lawyers, and the best of these are not found in Wall Street. Davis had to sit on boards of directors with men whose primary interest was making money. He never complained of this. It is the custom, and loyalty to his partners required it.

To a philosopher inquiring how he was bearing up, he remarked with a grin: "Dr. Johnson says there are few ways that men are employed more innocently than in getting money."

He was at the Club a great deal—especially after 1943, when his wife died. He used to come to lunch on Saturday, and sit at the East Table and talk and listen and laugh. He had a store of homely information about Presbyterians and gospel hymns and common law pleading, and he told stories about the Clarksburg circuit and of his adventures as Ambassador to Great Britain after the War, tales of Balfour and Lloyd George and the Prince of Wales. There was a detachment about him. He spoke without rancor or partisanship—in just the same objective way he related the facts to a court. But let some matter of civil rights be involved and he was anything but relaxed or indifferent. One of the last things he did was to come with all his might to the defense of Oppenheimer, before the tribunal which condemned him, in a gallant fight to save the services of the great physicist for the nation.

This man was born in Stonewall Jackson's state. He went to school in Thomas Jefferson's city. When he saw what was right, he put his hand to it, and neither the blandishments of the powerful nor the howling of the mob could stay the swift fulfillment of his appointed task.

Sir, we all salute you!

Bernard Augustine DeVoto

Bernard DeVoto graduated from Harvard with the Class of 1918. He received his degree late, because he took time out to go and fight in the First World War, but he had the good fortune to study writing under Dean Briggs, and was elected to Phi Beta Kappa. He remarked of himself: "Nature gave me a literary man's indolence, but by strength of character I turned myself into a professional writer."

He tried being a teacher, and was an instructor in English for four years at Northwestern University; but by 1927 he decided that teaching was blocking his career as a writer, and he moved himself and his family back to Cambridge, where he kept the pot boiling with light fiction while he prepared to get going with his primary literary objectives. His first work, Mark Twain's America, was published in 1932 and is a most remarkable combining of literary criticism and social history. His passionate interest was the West, and he complained humorously that he wrote so much about it he was coming to be regarded as a tributary of the Missouri River.

In 1935 he took charge of the "Editor's Easy Chair" in Harper's Magazine, and for twenty years he wrote in that department every month, never missing a copy. The editors left him entirely free to write whatever he wanted—and, indeed, it would have been quite impossible to associate with him on any other terms. The vigor and volume of his output were exciting. His opinions were powerful, and he devoted himself to the trenchant defense of free speech. His caustic paragraphs were in the best tradition of literary journalism, and he thoroughly knew what he was talking about. He publicly defied the censors, the F.B.I. (challenging it to question him about his associations), the Daughters of the Confederacy, and the D.A.R. He had a wonderfully good time withal. He was always popping with ideas, always provoked at some infringement of somebody's rights, always full of bounce. "I guess I just like to work," he said, "I'm a seven-day-a-week man."

First of all, though, he was a careful and distinguished chronicler of the westward course of empire. His famous trilogy is a classic history of America's expansion, written by one whose knowledge and love of the West have been surpassed by no other contemporary historian. He considered Huckleberry Finn the greatest American novel, and Walden the greatest work of nonfiction; and this reveals what manner of man he was. He was a living, driving force for common sense and tolerance in the land. He ceaselessly hammered at pretentiousness and sanctimoniousness and the blight of conformity. He was afraid neither of the Church nor of the American Legion, nor of anything else, and he hated complacency with all his hot soul.

Alas, he died at fifty-eight with his harness on his back. We lost a stalwart champion when his sword went out to sea.

Edwin Olin Downes

In 1924 Olin Downes became the music critic of the New York Times, and he continued in that employment the rest of his life. He knew music from every angle. He began to study it when he was eight years old; and by the time he was twenty he was an excellent pianist and was lecturing on harmony and the history of music at Boston University—besides serving as music critic for the Boston Post.

He came to be dean of American music critics—not by virtue of seniority or of technical excellence but rather because of a profound understanding of what music is all about. When he was weary, music refreshed him; and when he was fresh, it stimulated him. He never became surfeited or jaded with concert-going. He served an art that he adored, and he had a marvelous gift of finding words for the thoughts and emotions that music aroused in him. His work and his life were related to the whole wide world around him, and his feeling grew out of a deep realization that music is but another expression of the eternal effort of man to enrich himself and his world.

Downes wrote thousands of articles and millions of words. The vitality of his enthusiasm never seemed to ebb, and he had the faculty of giving his readers a sense of shared experience—like a good story-teller. There was no limit to the hot energy in his sturdy frame, and his urgent excitement was contagious and captivating.

He was aware that the sources of music are human beings of all sorts, in all manner of situations, in sickness and in health, in riches and in poverty; and basic to everything he did, and wrote, and thought, was an abiding curiosity and affection for the strengths and weaknesses of men and women.

Howard Everett Giles

Howard Giles was an artist and an art teacher. He was a member of the Century for thirty-five years, and until the last decade he used to be a familiar figure there. He studied under Denman Ross, learning about color arrangements and theories of composition, and became well known as a painter of picturesque scenes and an illustrator more or less of the Bellows school; but after he met Jay Hambridge, the teacher of what was called "Dynamic Symmetry," his style changed entirely and the geometric design of pictures absorbed his interest. He worked on this for some years and then decided that the formula was not adequate; and so he developed a system of design of his own called "the twelve directions," and on that prescription he operated the rest of his life. He had great skill in drawing, so he could make almost any system work; and his figures had a marvelous ease and gracefulness even when made to conform to the twelve directions.

Giles was always frail, and these last years he lived most all the time at South Woodstock, Vermont. He had a lovely old brick house with gardens, and there he could be found, happy and content. He was really at home in all the world, though fastidious and discriminating about it, and he always talked easily with all sorts and conditions of men. He had an eagerness and veneration for beauty that is vouchsafed only to artists, and to associate with him made one's heart leap up like seeing the rainbow in the sky. He was a pure and shining spirit whom we have lost a while.

Henry Warren Goddard

Harry Goddard was born in New York and got his legal training at New York Law School. He commenced the practice of law in 1902 in the firm of Gay and Goddard, and for a long decade he was a bachelor involved in Republican politics and soldiering in Squadron A.

In 1923 he was appointed United States District Judge by President Harding, and he served in that position the rest of his life. The law required him to live in the City, and he had an apartment at 215 East Seventy-second Street, which is the apartment house reputed to contain more members of the Century than any other in the town.

He also had a house in Madison, Connecticut, perched high on a rock by the Boston Post Road. Harry had lived in Madison, on and off, for many years; he had fixed this little house up with a tiny library where he kept the Federal Reports and could work at his tasks, and see the morning-glories climbing outside the window. The fields in back were bordered with white-painted fences that confined a flock of sheep and some cows.

He had a pleasant, gentle life in Madison. There was a Country Club, of which he was president, and he played golf—unexpectedly good golf. He had a curious wooden putter that he was marvelously attached to, and it rarely failed him.

As a judge he was the epitome of what a trial judge should be: punctual, courteous, and taciturn. Lawyers did not get into acrimonious arguments with him, and no one ever tried to patronize him. He would sit at the bench with a deadpan expression on his face, and the trial seemed to go forward irresistibly. It early became evident that he was quite aware of what was afoot, and if it became necessary he would make a remark or ask a question that indicated to counsel that he was not impressed. He had an innate sagacity more to be desired than great learning, and it served him well.

Harry served on the Committee on Admissions of the Club and, later, on the Board of Management. To these posts he brought understanding and common sense. When he said something, it was brief and simple, and presented in an orderly sequence. His fellow-members harbored a quite unreasonable confidence in his judgment, and they held him in an affectionate regard that would have astonished him if he could have plumbed it.

This man, completely devoid of vanity, had a most useful life devoted to public service, and, like all good men faithfully doing their duty in that state of life to which God has called them, he was happy and at peace with himself.

Norvin Hewitt Green

Norvin H. Green graduated from Columbia in 1919, after having served as a line officer in the First World War. He was born in New York, being descended from Peter Cooper and from Abram S. Hewitt, one-time Mayor of the City. He was active in education and the arts, and was a trustee of Brooklyn Polytechnic and a member of the Columbia College Council.

Green used to collect paintings and antiques which he kept in a large comfortable house at Tuxedo. In the living room was an elaborate toy railroad that he operated as a hobby. He was overly modest with regard to his literary abilities, but he was a student and authority on ferries to Manhattan and wrote a remarkably interesting monograph about them.

He was a member of the Club for less than two years before he died, and so, unfortunately, he was not a familiar figure in the Clubhouse. He was in exceedingly ill health toward the end, and had to spend his winters in Phoenix, Arizona.

He was a very pleasant person—informed, civilized, and wholly without pretence.

George de Boketon Greene

George Greene graduated from Cornell in 1895 and then went to work for the General Electric Company in Schenectady. His father (a Centurion) was executive officer of the Monitor in the battle with the Merrimac, and his portrait hangs in the East Room of the Club to this day.

After some years, Greene drifted out of the General Electric and joined the office of E. H. Rollins & Co., investment bankers in Boston; later he was transferred to New York and lived here many years—a partner in the firm. His country haunt was Cherry Valley, where he had a little farm and where he liked to be.

George was a civilized and pleasant person. He used to play cards at the Century with a group of cronies, and they were wonderfully vocal when the card-room was eventually taken over for other purposes. During the First World War he was usefully engaged in directing the work of the Liberty Loan Committee and finally he became general chairman of the money-raising activities in the City.

He was a good man and true.

Walter Hampden

Walter Hampden was born in Brooklyn in 1879. His father, John Hampden Dougherty, was a prominent lawyer there and a member of Mayor Seth Low's administration. Walter prepared at Brooklyn Polytechnic and went to Harvard, but after a year he left and continued his studies in Paris. He started being a professional actor in 1902 by joining the Benson Company in England, then on tour with Shakspere's plays, and he kept along with them for some years.

It was not till 1918 that he was recognized in America as a great Shaksperian actor, but once he got going, many busy years followed. His Cyrano ran on Broadway to packed houses for eight months in 1923-1924. Again and again he did Hamlet, Macbeth, Shylock, Othello, Petruchio, Richard III, and Henry V; and he acted in plays by Ibsen and Barrie and others. He was the last of a long line of great actors that came down through Irving, and Robertson, and Sothern, steeped in the classical tradition, with immense authority, style, and the grand manner.

Not for nothing can one be a great actor. Hampden became, rather than impersonated, the character he was playing; and it is unseemly for Macbeth to be chattering at a cocktail party or for Cyrano to travel round in a two-tone convertible. Bismarck forbade the Prussian Army Officers to play tennis because he considered it derogated from the essential dignity of their profession, and likewise the Pope is well advised not to play golf. There's a divinity that shapes our ends, and if one is an actor then all the world's a stage.

Hampden observed these restrictions. He was dignified without being stuffy. He had a thin, aesthetic face with a sharp aquiline nose, heavy eyebrows, and piercing eyes. His hands were a constant and not objectionable adjunct to his conversation. He delighted in good-natured banter, and after he had placed his companion in some awkward position he never left him there but smilingly led him back again to solid ground without any lingering embarrassment. He was for long the President of The Players, and in that office he conducted himself with a grace and charm that belied the exceeding competency of his administration.

Doubtless, so long as English is spoken there will always be a Shakspere company somewhere, but for the purposes of the theatre in New York in the first decade of the century Shakespere was as dead as Marley. And it was Walter Hampden who accomplished the renaissance, who brought the great plays to life, who filled the stalls with eager audiences. He embellished the high tradition in which he worked, and his name shall be inscribed imperishable in the long annals of the drama.

Herbert Sherman Houston

Herbert S. Houston graduated from University of South Dakota in 1888, and in 1917 he received an honorary LL.D. degree there. He was an editor and publisher. He started work for the Sioux City Journal and later was an editor of the Chicago Tribune. In 1900 he became a member of Doubleday, Page & Co., and this brought him to the City. He retired as vice-president in 1921.

In his varied employments connected with printer's ink, Houston was all his life engaged in forwarding the cause of world peace. He served on innumerable committees and organizations, and he lectured and broadcast arguments for the brotherhood of nations. He was an ardent and articulate supporter of the League of Nations and later of the United Nations, and he was instrumental in organizing all sorts of educational campaigns designed to inform people about international relations. He was on the side of the angels, and everybody wished him well.

Houston was at the Century a great deal. After his second wife died, he moved into the Columbia Club across the street so as to be near by. He made friends easily and was not in the least shy, and the Club was filled with men who were interested in the things that interested him. So he grew old pleasantly and in reasonable contentment, respected and serene.

Archer Milton Huntington

Archer M. Huntington was born in New York and was privately educated here and in Spain. He went to the University of Madrid, and later he took courses at Harvard and Columbia and Yale. From his father he inherited a very large fortune, and this enabled him to contribute to the nation's culture on a titanic scale. He was an author and a poet in his own right, but as a patron of arts and letters in America he was without a peer.

His principal artistic interest was Spain, and he knew intimately its history, its literature, and its lovely pictures. The Cid was his great hero, and he put a gigantic equestrian statue of him in front of the Hispanic Museum. At Audubon Terrace, at Broadway and 155th Street, he gave the land and the magnificent buildings of the Church of Our Lady of Guadalupe, the American Numismatic Museum, the American Academy of Arts and Letters, the American Hispanic Museum, the American Geographic Museum, the Museum of the American Indian, and the National Institute of Arts and Letters. In addition, he set up generous endowments for these institutions, as well as for the American Museum of Natural History, the New York Historical Society, and many others. The Mariners Museum at Newport News would alone seem an almost incredible monument to one man's devoted generosity.

Archer Huntington was a shy man. His great size (he was almost a giant) and his large fortune were integral parts of his personality, and it seemed as though they made him self-conscious and anxious to avoid the limelight. He belonged to many societies that promoted the arts, but he never would accept an office or position of prominence in any. He was modest in making his gifts, neither requiring that they be associated with his name nor prescribing capriciously the manner in which they should be administered. He thought of himself as an author and editor, and he was responsible for unlocking vast areas of Spanish literature in English translations. He did for art and letters in New York what the Medici did long ago for Florence.

Maecenas, atavis edite regibus,
O et praesidium et dulce decus meum.

Raymond Ives

Raymond Ives prepared at Pomfret and graduated from Yale in 1908. He was Business Manager of the Yale Daily News, and perhaps this influenced him to become an accountant; but, in any event, he went to work for Price, Waterhouse. After a few years he quit that firm and made a partnership of his own that he worked with contentedly the rest of his life. He liked being an accountant. Not only was he exceedingly competent, but he had an understanding of where this calling fits in the organization of the world, and he perceived the increasing importance of it in modern life. He used to go to Haiti every year and spend a couple of months auditing accounts of various sugar companies there; and he was also involved with jobs in Cuba and Central America.

When the First World War came, he joined the Army and was assigned to the Quartermaster Corps; and from there he was appointed Paymaster of the Expeditionary Forces, where he gave excellent service. After his family, Ray's three great interests were Pomfret, Yale, and the Century Club. His affectionate loyalty to these institutions was simple and sincere and testified to the kind of man he was. He lived at 215 East Seventy-second Street—the famous caravansary that shelters more Centurions than any other—and he knew the other denizens, of course, and they had a good time together. It amused him to discover queer places to dine, where he could take learned friends and discuss the lost civilization of the Incas or the strange customs of the Spanish Main. He was full of curious information—especially about the Caribbean—and he was a lively and stimulating talker, modest and friendly and gentle.

The test of a culture is the honor and regard it gives to those who embody the values that go to make up the Good Life. The importance of men that make a conspicuous impression on outward events is as mere smoke to the fire compared with them that contribute to continue the traditions in which our civilization is rooted; and among those who held high the torch, Raymond Ives was not least but honored of them all.

Marshall Rutgers Kernochan

Marshall R. Kernochan was born in the City and closely associated with it all his life. He studied piano and composition here and in Frankfurt, Germany; and though his formal education did not include a college degree, he was a person of erudite accomplishments. He was not only a music publisher but a composer of art songs and chorales, and his songs were sung by Kirsten Flagstad, Leonard Warren, and other leading artists.

At Edgartown on Martha's Vineyard he had a house that he bought more than thirty years ago; he used to spend all the time he could there, and there he died. He liked Martha's Vineyard exceedingly and in the town and the summer colony he had many friends. He was, or had been, President of the Reading Room and of the Golf Club, and was a Director of the Edgartown Boys Club; but apart from these formal positions he was also a very useful citizen and a solid pillar of the community.

Wise men acquire an interest collateral to their main occupation—sailing boats, the Church, the National Guard, politics, travel—Kernochan was interested in Masonry. He was a 33d degree Mason, a past master of Holland Lodge F. and A.M. and past grand marshal of the Grand Lodge of New York State, and past most wise master in Aurora Grata Chapter of the Scottish Rite in Brooklyn.

Besides having these esoteric distinctions, he was a warm and lively person, friendly and simple and kind.

Fiske Kimball

Fiske Kimball was the director of the Philadelphia Museum of Art. He graduated from Harvard in 1909—a classmate of G. H. Edgell, who became director of the Boston Museum of Fine Arts. In 1915 Kimball took a Ph.D. at Michigan; he began to practise and teach architecture there and later at the University of Virginia. He remarked, himself, that he left "a trail of houses in the South and West, and particularly was involved with the restoration of historic buildings at Monticello, Mt. Vernon, Stratford [home of the Lees], Homewood [home of the Carrolls], Williamsburg, and the old houses in Fairmount Park, Philadelphia."

In 1925 he was appointed director of the Philadelphia Museum. At that time the enormous building was an empty shell. Promptly, upon his assuming his responsibilities, through his acumen and enterprise, there came floating up the Delaware antique rooms from England and the Continent, unprecedented Oriental units from China and Japan, Gothic and Romanesque magnificence in stone. Money was raised, and under his direction it was wisely spent. The period of these acquisitions culminated in his triumphant purchase of the Foulc Collection of medieval and Renaissance art, the whole providing the background contents, as it were, for the Museum on the Parkway.

Perhaps his most exciting acquisition came in 1950, when the wonderful Arensberg Collection of pre-Columbian and modern art was donated, and this put the Philadelphia Museum in the forefront with the greatest museums of the land. It was certainly due to Kimball that these unique collections came to Philadelphia instead of going elsewhere, for the donors had confidence in him and his staff, and they bestowed their treasures accordingly.

He himself remained a grave, dedicated scholar, one of the leaders in his field of eighteenth-century design and architecture, constantly refreshing his taste and standards in further research and study. His energy and imagination and the range of his interests in literature, music, art, architecture, and history marked him quite apart from ordinary men; and surely it was a Divine Providence which, three decades ago, directed his steps to Philadelphia and the Museum and gave him the vision of its glorious possibilities.

Franklin Butler Kirkbride

Franklin Kirkbride was a trustee—not just one of those men who invest money for beneficiaries, but a civic leader who worked at all kinds of public jobs that had to be done.

He graduated from Haverford in 1889 (Phi Beta Kappa), and went into the Pennsylvania Company for Insurances on Lives and Granting Annuities in Philadelphia. There he learned about banking and securities; and after a time he came to New York and established the Franklin B. Kirkbride Financial Management Corporation. With this as his main base he became involved with various commercial enterprises, but he was particularly associated with the Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor, the Community Service Society, Stevens Institute, and the Milbank Memorial Fund.

Frank's father was a doctor, the first physician-in-chief of the Pennsylvania Hospital for the Insane, and a founder of the American Psychiatric Association; and Frank himself, all his life, was deeply interested in mental ailments and feeble-mindedness. He became Secretary of the Board of Visitors of Letchworth Village in 1909, and Board President in 1935. His conviction that research and study would lead ultimately to the control of mental disorder so impressed Governor Dewey that Letchworth Village was designated as the official center for the state's research in mental deficiency and was provided with state funds for that purpose.

Frank was wise without pretense or ostentation. He had a twinkling, subtle sense of humor. He was a forthright, but discreet and generous, judge of men. He was born in Philadelphia, but withal his manner of speech reminded one irresistibly of Concord, Emerson, and Thoreau. He achieved large objectives with seemingly mincing gestures and enterprise.

In the Club he was an exceedingly useful member, serving at various times on the Auditing Committee, the Nominating Committee, the Board of Trustees (two terms), and for twenty years as Chairman of the Investment Committee. He had a happy faculty of not breeding resistance or antagonism when he made a report or initiated a proposal.

He was tirelessly interested in the Century. He was Chairman of the Levitation Committee that raised the money to pay for the new elevator two years ago, and just a few weeks before he died the Club awarded him the first Century Medal in recognition of all that he had done for us. Frank was eighty-eight years old, and he was as pleased as only an old man can be. He made a little speech that concluded: "My race is nearly run. My aging eyes can happily stand this momentary glare of the flash lights. From now on attention will be directed to the shadowy group of future Centurions who have still, as the years roll on, to face the kindly ordeal prescribed by future Admission Committees."

Charles Donagh Maginnis

Charles D. Maginnis was born in Londonderry, and came to America in 1882, at the age of 18. He went to work in Boston in the office of Edmund W. Wheelwright, the architect. In 1898 he founded a firm of his own, and practised architecture in Boston the rest of his life. In the course of sixty years he received about every honor within the profession, and he completely transformed the quality of Catholic Church architecture in this country, giving it a beauty and distinction that it had lacked before.

He was a perfectionist. He was a most skillful draughtsman, not only in architectural design but with pen and ink drawings, and his book of pen drawings is full of exquisite examples of his own work. He was also extremely aware of words and nice in his choice of them—so much so that if he had not been exceedingly witty he might sometimes have appeared precious. He was one of the best after-dinner speakers among the architects, and making speeches amused him. He was a good show, besides, being a handsome, well-set-up man with white hair, a pointed white mustache, and a general appearance of aristocratic distinction.

Twice he was awarded the gold medal of the American Institute of Architects for ecclesiastical design. The present high altar and exterior bronze doors of St. Patrick's Cathedral in New York are his. He had impeccable taste, and though his own generation made him follow a "conservative expression," he was entirely understanding of contemporary architectural projects, and, had he been younger, would surely have been among the innovators himself.

He was a charming and courteous gentleman, and his nautral endowment for the practice of architecture was outstanding in a generation of great architects.

James Farley McClelland

James F. McClelland graduated from Columbia School of Mines in 1900. Except for two years as a mining engineer in Nevada, he taught geology and mining until 1917. During this period he served successively on the faculties of the Universities of Wyoming, Columbia, Stanford, and Yale, where he received an honorary M.A. degree.

After the First World War—he served in the Signal Corps—he gave up teaching, in which he had a distinguished record, and became consulting engineer to the Liberty Bank of New York; from there he went to the New York Trust Company, and then to the Chemical Bank. In 1931 he joined Phelps Dodge Corporation as a vice-president and director, and became a member of the company's executive committee; and there he continued until he retired in 1952.

This is a very interesting performance. There are plenty of Centurions who have withdrawn from the marts of trade to enter monasteries, or libraries, or laboratories; but it is a rare bird who starts a career in the cloistered halls of learning and then bursts into Wall Street. It is provoking to speculate on what he thought of banks and bankers, of high pressure executives, of the solemn platitudes that go for wisdom among the midgets. But we shall never know. Though he belonged to the Club for forty-two years, even Daniel cannot remember ever seeing him come in.

Edgar Grim Miller

Edgar G. Miller graduated from Gettysburg College in 1911; two years later he took a Ph.D. in Biochemistry at Columbia, at the age of only twenty years. He went off to the First World War, and when he got back he returned to Columbia, and the rest of his career was centered there. He became Professor of Biochemistry and ultimately was Dean of the Graduate Faculties.

Miller's main field of interest was always biological chemistry, but he applied his encyclopedic knowledge with conspicuous success to problems of physiology and clinical medicine. He was likewise informed and interested in the social sciences—indeed, in all aspects of human activity—and was exceedingly useful in contributing to university seminars a point of view based on a scientific approach to such problems as the maintenance of peace and the future of democracy. His remarks at these gatherings served to bring diffuse thinking into focus by calling attention to parallels in experimentation in the natural sciences, and his breadth of knowledge and the penetration of his mind were a constant stimulation to his fellows.

He was a tremendous reader and read along many different lines. He was a devotee of Johnson and Trollope, a student of Chinese poetry, an amateur of painting and of music. But it was his own character and personality that made the enduring mark on all who knew him. He was a man of extraordinary sweetness of disposition, warm and affectionate, with a lively vision of the possibilities of things. His imagination followed his conclusions and their consequences into new territories and sailed uncharted seas, new planets swam into his ken, and ever-larger understanding came to him more and more.

Carl Wilhelm Emil Milles

Carl Milles was a Swedish sculptor. He was born in Upsala. When he was twenty-two, he left home and went to Paris, intending to become an instructor of Swedish gymnastics; but he had the fortune to be employed as an assistant by Rodin. Thereupon he cast away his dumbbells and commenced the serious study of art, went to Rome and to Munich for further studies, and eventually became a sculptor of extraordinary talent.

When he came to the United States in 1929, he was regarded by his countrymen as the leading national sculptor of Sweden. In America his works are found in lovely fountains—the Fountain of Faith at Falls Church, Virginia, and the Fountain of the Muses in the Metropolitan Museum—and a massive mural in wood at the Rockefeller Plaza. In this country he made his headquarters at Detroit, so he was not a familiar figure in the Club.

Like his sculpture, Milles was cast in an heroic mold. His mythological groups, his majestic fountains, his historical figures adorn all the capitals of Western Europe and command the interest and admiration of the public to a degree quite impossible to works of a lesser scale. He had a curious combination of fancifulness and sculptural grandeur that was the essential quality of his genius, and this saved his work from the unrelieved and impersonal glumness that mars so much public sculpture. His works are not only monumental, they are vital. They seem to clothe abstract ideas—youth, love, heroism, loyalty—in specific tangible images.

Milles died in Stockholm in his house, that was adjacent to the art museum which he had founded. He was eighty years old, adored by his fellow Swedes, the inspired portrayer of the essential things in life. His sculptures spoke to the people of far off things that happened long ago, of times past, and of times present, and of times that are to be.

William DeWitt Mitchell

William Mitchell graduated from Lawrenceville (N.J.) and went to Yale to study electrical engineering, but he soon changed his mind and decided to be a lawyer. He graduated from the University of Minnesota in 1895 and was admitted to the bar in St. Paul in 1896.

He became one of the leading lawyers of the state, and in 1925 he was appointed Solicitor General by President Coolidge. In 1929 President Hoover appointed him Attorney General, and later offered to appoint him a Justice of the Supreme Court, but he refused it. He came to New York and went into private practice with Carl Taylor in 1933, being then in his sixtieth year.

In the City he was rapidly recognized as a lawyer of the first magnitude, and he fitted easily and pleasantly into the life of the place. He lived on Long Island because, as he remarked, he was devoted to golf, and at Garden City one could play practically the year around. He was a fine golfer and continued to play till very near the end of his days.

His talk of his early life in the Mississippi Valley in the area around the home of his boyhood at Winona, Minnesota, was of fishing the small streams that were alive with trout and of the problems of hooking and landing bass in the swift waters of the Mississippi. He talked of his experiences shooting big game in various parts of the West, though in his later years he hunted without shooting.

In his early days he had considerable experience on river boats in one capacity or another, and the River was an important part of his life. He reflected also the influence of his father, a truly great man and a great judge, and his conduct of life was simple and undistorted by inward doubts or conflicts.

No event of his experience appeared to loom larger than others. He served as a commissioned officer of the line, and as judge advocate of the Second U.S. Army Corps in the Spanish War, and he served in the First World War. He viewed these proceedings cheerfully as a duty done to the best of his ability. He took some pride in his discovery that, though he was older than the officers and men he was thrown with in the First World War, he did not see anyone in better physical shape than he.

His experiences as Solicitor General and as Attorney

General of the United States were again a matter of satisfaction at duty well done and at having found congenial employment for his talents. On the personal side he formed friendships during that period that lasted all his life.

He was a diligent student of law and of history, and he had a remarkable memory. His mind, of a distinctly mechanical turn, was intensely practical. No one could observe him at work and fail to be impressed by his vast fund of knowledge, the depth of his wisdom, and his keen and independent judgment. His grasp of the essential facts in a wide variety of cases was amazingly quick and sure, and his power to reduce them to a common denominator and to state readily the legal principles governing them was unmatched. In argument he was cool and self-possessed and invariably fair to the opposition; and his honesty was transparent. In general, he shunned conflict, but under attack he was unyielding. He could not be diverted from the orderly course of his argument by any means, and he was a truly formidable opponent.

An outstanding characteristic of his work as a lawyer was that every fact that he asserted, every legal principle he stated, came only after careful investigation and study he had made himself. He was completely self-reliant.

His practice was to reject any case in which he did not believe, saying politely to those who sought to engage him that they were entitled to be represented by someone who believed in their case. He did not hesitate to disregard accepted legal doctrines when, in any case, they could not be reconciled with the facts of life, or were not workable when applied to daily affairs. He held firmly to the belief, and practised his belief, that his profession was an honorable and dedicated calling and not a commercial enterprise.

Mitchell was a man of dauntless courage and complete integrity, faithful to himself and his own nature, to his chosen friends, and to the discharge of any obligation he assumed or that circumstances imposed upon him. His solid virtue was never even dented by the blows of calamity or the incidents of success. He was well aware of his extraordinarily gifted mind and of his powers of exposition, but he was never arrogant. In spite of his great achievements and his rare gifts, it is doubtful that he really knew contentment, apparently holding it unlikely that the joys of the moment would be repeated in unknown fate. Contact with him was like a touch of nature in her grander moments, and he was at the same time a warm-hearted, devoted friend.

Charles Rufus Morey

Charles R. Morey graduated from Michigan in 1899 and received the M.A. in classics the year following. Then he went to Rome and studied art, and in 1903 he went to Princeton and joined the faculty. His field was art and archaeology, and in 1938 he was appointed to the Marquand Professorship. Thus he was connected with Princeton for fifty years—happily and with high distinction.

He was the compiler of the Princeton Index of Christian Art, a catalogue of religious paintings, sculpture, frescoes, coins, medals, and tapestries from the birth of Christ until 1500. This astounding index contains 500,000 cards and 100,000 photographs. One copy is kept at Princeton, one at Dumbarton Oaks, N.H., and the third at the Pontifical Institute for Christian Archaeology in Rome. In the collection are listed all known works dealing with the Bible, lives of the Saints, and history of the Church. It has been of inestimable value to medieval scholars on both sides of the Atlantic.

Dr. Morey was exceedingly concerned with Italy and the Italians. He was largely instrumental in having the Fulbright Act become operative there, and he worked hard to help the great Italian Universities replenish their staffs after the fall of Fascism. In 1945 he was appointed Cultural Attaché at the American Embassy in Rome, and he was there till shortly before his death. His service at the Embassy took him away from New York, so that he was seen but little at the Century, but he added lustre to his Club and to his country by his labor in restoring to the German libraries in Rome their books that had been taken beyond the Alps by the foaming Nazis.

He was a man of strong physique with a quiet but urgent manner of speaking. His face had an expression of chronic surprise that seemed inconsonant with the immense scholarship which lay within him; but this vagary encouraged various shy vessels to come up and talk to him, and he surely would have counted it a happy attribute—for he was friendly and kind, and he loved his fellow-men. He chose a field within the compass of his strength and built a monument more enduring than brass.

Benjamin Alexander Morton

Benjamin A. Morton entered Harvard with the class of 1898, but after two years of it he went off to the Spanish War without waiting to get his degree. He was in the Army for two years, and in 1899 he was severely wounded during service in the Philippines (his left arm was cut off by a bolo). He then attended the University of Michigan Law School, graduating in 1903.

From 1903 to 1912 he practised law in this City; and his work, in an old firm, was so reliable that he was chosen to head the personal trust department of a great bank. There most of his life's work was done. Reorganization and mergers came and went like the seasons, but he remained like an oak.

His vacations were spent in travel. During a trip in the Caribbean he discovered fragments of the history of the life of Aimée du Buque, a cousin of Napoleon's Empress Josephine. With the thoroughness characteristic of all that he did, he followed the trail, picking up more fragments in various European capitals, until he had pieced together all of her life, which is told in his book The Veiled Empress.

There was nothing newfangled about Ben. His body and his mind were fashioned to work well in time-tested ways. When new problems arose, he met them steadily and saw them whole. He spoke slowly and clearly. His thoughts were organized and presented in orderly sequence, so that they were intelligible to any that listened. He devoted his life to looking after the property of people quite incapable of doing it for themselves, and his kindness and patience with widows and orphans and wastrels marked him as the Good Samaritan of the City.

John Punnett Peters

John P. Peters graduated from Yale in 1908, and from Columbia's College of Physicians and Surgeons in 1913. He served his internship at the Presbyterian Hospital, was commissioned a Captain in the Army Medical Corps, and went overseas with the hospital's contingent in 1917. All doctors did not go to the First World War; and when Jack got home he was dismayed to find that the best medical positions were filled by the stay-at-homes. The senior men who had been in France had not been able to keep up with the recent advances in American medicine, and they found that the young interns and residents were far ahead of them in many respects. This was particularly hard on a man like Peters, whose standards were high, but he adjusted himself rapidly and caught up with the modern advances.

In 1921 he was appointed assistant professor of internal medicine at Yale; and in 1927 he was made Ely Professor of Medicine there—a post that he held to the end of his life. He was a remarkable scientific scholar and a great biochemist, the author of more than 150 papers, books, chapters, and monographs on internal medicine, diseases of metabolism, electrolyte and acid base equilibrium, nephritis, water exchange, and the social aspects of medicine.

In 1937 he was one of the organizers of a committee of doctors, later known as the Committee of Four Hundred, which was in disagreement with the American Medical Association with regard to a national health policy and the public health service. Peters thought there was no real conflict of aims, and said so, and he charged that the Journal of the American Medical Association had created the general impression that there was opposition to the official line. The American Medical Association eventually emerged from the situation without any laurels.

The descendants of Procrustes now went out to enforce conformity. The faceless informers informed, and the secret charges were charged, and Peters was haled before a security board to compel his dismissal from the Surgeon General's Office.

He was acquitted.

They tried again with new informers and new unspecified specifications.

He was again acquitted.

So then they appealed to a loyalty reviewing board, which obligingly issued an order for his discharge. The board did this on the now familiar ground that they had to decide in "favor" of the United States by depriving the people of this faithful servant.

The unfortunate Peters now had to appeal to the Supreme Court, which ruled that his discharge was unlawful and ordered that he be reinstated.

Jack Peters was always a rebel, always for free speech, and never afraid to fight. It is men like him that prevent the associations of professional men from becoming great ant-hills of inert complacency, that pursue with ridicule Dr. Pangloss who assumes that all is for the best in the best of all possible worlds, that fully understand that the willingness of good men to resort to the sword is ultimately the only guarantee of liberty and justice, the only fear of the tyrant.

Let us be thankful for dissenters, for of such is the kingdom of God. It was not in Russia that one little child remarked that the King had no clothes on.

Thomas Reed Powell

Thomas Reed Powell graduated from the University of Vermont in 1900 and from the Harvard Law School in 1904. He started to practise in Burlington, but in 1907 he was hired as a lecturer by Columbia, and always after that he was a teacher. He became Ruggles Professor of Constitutional Law at Columbia; and in 1925 he was appointed Langdell Professor in the Harvard Law School, and there he spent the rest of his life.

He taught constitutional law. He cast some doubt on whether there really was any such thing; but his lectures were crowded, and he certainly knew more about it than anyone else—so it didn't matter much. He had an arrogant personality and a high-pitched voice, and the whole set-up was tremendously stimulating to the students. Intellectually, he gave no quarter and didn't expect any. He hated bores and was not always civil to them. He liked to do the talking himself, but he was usually well worth listening to, and he destroyed ill-considered opinions like a tank going through a watch factory.

In his class-room he tested ideas by putting them into action and then observing how they operated and what the consequences were. He was impatient of generalities and abstractions. "Be more pictorial," he would say. He used to tell a story of how a questioning student got as far as, "Professor Powell, does Judge Sutherland think . . . ," whereupon the professor interrupted with an explosive "No"; and the student, persisting, rephrased his question: "But, I mean, Professor, do you think . . . ," and this time the class interrupted with a thundering "No."

When reporters sought his reaction to a proposed Massachusetts law requiring of teachers an oath to support the Constitution, he observed that he thought it would be only fair in his case, as for a long time the Constitution had been supporting him.

With his coevals he was humorously defeatist, but for all his intellectual rigor, he had a streak of kindliness. When Gus Hand died, the little piece Reed Powell wrote about him was friendly, reminiscent, and quite sweet.

He used to come to the Century every June and stay about two weeks correcting examination papers. Beginning about ten in the morning he took a scotch-and-soda every hour—just one. Along about five he quit his labors and emerged on the back porch for conversation. It was wonderful. He had a pleasant fortnight, and the philosophers on the back porch acquired an unwonted velocity that did them good.

Powell was a distinguished scholar and a unique teacher. He was aware that the law of the Constitution is the law of the Justices, but he also fully realized the compulsions of a viable federal system; and when he brewed these factors together, the vagaries of the Justices, the pressures of the time, and the bones of the precedents all began to make sense and be exciting.

Ezra Parmalee Prentice

E. Parmalee Prentice graduated from Amherst in 1885 and was elected to Phi Beta Kappa. He was admitted to the bar in Chicago in 1886, and then came East again and studied for a year at the Harvard Law School. In 1890 he left Chicago and came to live in New York and to practise law here. For many years he was a partner in the firm of Murray, Prentice, and Howland.

Prentice was never particularly interested in the law. Other matters more urgently engaged his attention; and the chief of these was a large farm, "Mount Hope," he had at Williamstown, where he conducted elaborate experiments in breeding dairy cattle. He was responsible for the "proved sire" method of improving milk production, and he developed an index for judging the value of a bull that is the recognized technique among breeders today.

He was also interested in Latin and published a seven-volume set of modern stories translated into Latin which he called the "Mount Hope Classics."

Prentice was a member of the Century for forty-seven years. After he retired, in 1924, he came to the Club very seldom. He was a quiet, modest man, friendly and comfortable to be with.

Integer vitae scelerisque purus.

Albert William Putnam

Albert William Putnam graduated from Columbia in 1897 and from the Columbia Law School in 1900. From 1904 he practised law with the firm of Winthrop and Stimson, and when he died he was the senior partner. Besides being a distinguished lawyer he was a soldier. He enlisted in Squadron A in 1898, came to be Captain of B Troop in 1914, and went off to the Mexican Border in 1916. When the First World War broke out, he was mustered into federal service and promoted to be Major, 54th F.A., 18th Division. He was always a line officer.

In the City he was inextricably identified with Columbia sports and Columbia business. He was Chairman of the Finance Committee of the Trustees for years, and when he came to the Century he generally came for lunch with some of his old Columbia associates. He was an enthusiastic chess-player and the only one of twenty opponents to score against the great Lasker in the tournament in 1924.

When he was an undergraduate, he was in Phi Beta Kappa and President of his graduating class. He played on the football and hockey teams, and rowed on the crew. For more than two decades he refereed the Harvard–Yale boat races at New London—to the complete satisfaction of all. In truth, he was part of the show that people came to see.

Bill Putnam was homely and dynamic, with a hearty laugh and an enormous capacity for work and for play. Those who knew him regarded him not only with respect and admiration but with a wealth of affection. He was completely free from cant or swagger—a robust and gentle person of obvious integrity, a fellow to go bear-hunting with. It is miraculous that he could do so much so well; he liked life, he was unhurried, and he always seemed to keep his feet (and his head), no matter what the pressures were.

Herbert Putnam

Herbert Putnam graduated from Harvard College in 1883, studied law at Columbia University, and was admitted to the Minnesota bar in 1885. Originally, it was his intention to practise law in Minneapolis; but, having taken a temporary position as librarian of the Minneapolis Athenaeum, a private library, he became so interested in bibliographical matters that he abandoned the law. Three years later, when the Minneapolis Public Library absorbed the proprietary institution, he became public librarian.

In 1895 he accepted the post of librarian of the Boston Public Library. During the four years he headed the Boston institution Dr. Putnam, whom President Eliot called "one of the three best librarians in the country," made of the Boston library the foremost public library in the United States.

President McKinley in 1899 offered him the post of librarian of the Congressional Library, but he declined it. The President then offered the librarianship to a former Congressman. This caused a great commotion in academic and intellectual circles, and the President turned back to Dr. Putnam with considerable urgency. He accepted the position as a call to duty, and the rest of his career was spent in Washington making the Library of Congress one of the greatest libraries of the world.

He was the active head of the Library of Congress for forty years; and when he turned over his duties in 1939 to his successor, the huge Library contained more than five million volumes and four hundred miles of steel shelving. He was appointed librarian emeritus, and used to go every day to his office for a few hours for consultation.

Putnam was a slight, modest person but exceedingly astute. His reserved and disarming bearing won the confidence of the most Philistine of the Congressional Committees and convinced the members he was talking about their Library—while he was really building a great national library without the name. He never seemed to have to battle for appropriations, but he was most remarkably firm about what he required, and he always seemed to get it in the end.

He was President of the Cosmos Club for a time, and he used to sit at the round table there and talk and listen, picking up ideas and making suggestions, to the end of his life. His father was the founder of G. P. Putnam's Sons, the publishing house, and Herbert—the last of eleven children—was born in Civil War days and brought up among books and in the New England tradition of letters and learning.

Of making many books there is no end, but inspired librarians are exceedingly rare. Let us rejoice, therefore, and be grateful that a compassionate Creator provided the nation with this great scholar to administer its library these many years.

Reginald Chauncey Robbins

Reginald C. Robbins prepared at Noble's School in Boston and graduated from Harvard, summa cum laude, with highest honors in political science, in 1892. Thereafter he studied philosophy in the Harvard Graduate School. In 1896 he became treasurer of the Waltham Watch Company, in which his father had large investments, but he was wholly unsuited to business and finance, which he found a bewildering burden. His main interest was philosophy; by 1920 he had written and published nine volumes of philosophical poems. About that time he discovered that he had a pleasing baritone voice, and he began writing songs for himself to sing; he published 150 of them.

The range of his interests and activities was amazing, and he remarked himself that at one time or another he had become engrossed with civil service, philosophy, poetry, music, botany, forestry, conservation, ornithology, yachting, steeplechasing, travel, and lecturing. He lived in Boston and in Pride's Crossing, and this doubtless accounts for the curious admixture of the learned and the sporting life. Philosophy, however, was his point of return, and his absorption with this field led him to found the Robbins Library of Philosophy and Psychology at Harvard. He also authored a definitive work, Outline of a General Aesthetics, wherein he told what he knew about beauty, poetry, music, and art.

Robbins lived to be eighty-four years old. This last decade he lived at Santa Barbara, but to the end of his life he continued a member of the Beverly, Manchester, Eastern, and Corinthian Yacht Clubs and the Myopia, Norfolk, and Middlesex Hunts, so strong were his early ties with the civilization of the Back Bay. He was a small, gnomish-looking man, and used to wear a high, stiff collar and the clothes of an earlier day. He was extremely pleasant and polite, and sometimes disconcertingly learned. In whatever he undertook he developed an admirable technique, and he pursued his ends with a single-minded intensity that glowed within him like a hidden fire.

Joseph Charles Roper

Joseph C. Roper graduated from New York University Medical College in 1896. He became an attending physician at the New York Hospital, first in pediatrics and later in internal medicine, and he taught at the Cornell Medical School and then at Bellevue Hospital.

He had a great gift for comforting those distressed in mind as well as in body. He seemed to inspire his patients with the desire to get well. His knowledge was sure, and he was surrounded with an aura of friendliness and good will.

In appearance he was short and stout and with a roseate complexion and jolly exterior. He was obviously very powerful physically, and perhaps this contributed to inspire confidence in him. He had an even temper and a ready wit, and these were combined with a sympathetic understanding that endeared him to his friends. He was essentially a doctor's doctor—respected and beloved, a sure refuge in illness and suffering.

In the long half century that he practised medicine in the City his wisdom ever increased with the years, and at the last his reward was the gratitude of a legion of spirits, once troubled, whom he had delivered from evil and restored to the way of the Good Life.

Ansley Wilcox Sawyer

Ansley Sawyer prepared at Groton, and graduated from Yale in 1907. Then he went to the Buffalo University Law School, where he graduated in 1910; he was admitted to the bar the same year. He was born in Buffalo, and he died there in the same house in which he was born; and he practised law there all his life and came to be recognized as one of the outstanding corporation lawyers of the city. But his position of leadership in the social and philanthropic affairs of Buffalo was even more important.

He was a natural leader. He loved people, and everybody he came in contact with liked him. His remarkable competence as an executive never made him dogmatic, nor did it lessen the lightness of his touch. He was possessed of never-failing common sense, and it was impossible to provoke him to extravagances. He disarmed those who differed with him by his friendly smile and the obviously tolerant fairness with which he considered their contentions, but he was a sturdy fighter for the things that he thought were right, and entirely aware of the disingenuousness of such as sought to hoodwink him.

Quite apart from how great Ansley Sawyer was, or wasn't, he certainly was one of the most charming people in the world. He was loyal to his friends, and they were fanatically devoted to him. He had a pleasant, simple face and a ready smile. He was completely devoid of cant, and made no pretense of being anything other than what he was. He hunted foxes in the Genesee Valley and sailed a boat in the sea about Nantucket; and in Buffalo, when it came his turn to do something pro bono publico, he took off his coat and went to work with a will. After he was struck with his last malady and knew he would shortly die, his countenance never changed, his cheerfulness never faltered; but he went imperturbably about his affairs like the gallant spirit that he was.

Montgomery Schuyler

Montgomery Schuyler graduated from Columbia in 1899 and took the A.M. the following year. His outstanding talent was for languages, of which he spoke French, German, Russian, and Italian fluently, and he had a working knowledge of several others. If he had not been diverted to diplomacy, he could have become a very considerable philologist, for he was a first rate student of Sanskrit and the classics, and the leading authority of his day on Avestan and the religion and culture of ancient Persia.

In 1902, however, he began his diplomatic career as Second Secretary of the Embassy at St. Petersburg; after that he was moved from one capital to another, increasing in rank as the years passed. He finally became Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to El Salvador; and then he retired and went into Wall Street. While he was a stockbroker, he revived his early interests in Sanskrit and the ancient civilization of Iran, but he never got back to academic pursuits or renewed the scholarly researches he was so well fitted for.

In politics he was always a Republican. He got his start in the heyday of the Ohio hierarchy, and the New Deal was anathema to him. He was interested in genealogy and the Dutch past of New York, and was a director of the Netherland-American Foundation; but he did not frequent the Club very much except for the music recitals.

Schuyler came of an old New York family. His demeanor was correct and reserved. He was not original, but whatever he undertook he accomplished with admirable style and finish. In the day when every man's work shall be made manifest, it will be written for all to read that he served his country loyally and well.

William Jay Schieffelin

William Jay Schieffelin graduated from Columbia School of Mines in 1887, and then took a Ph.D. in chemistry at the University of Munich. He always thought of himself as a chemist, and for many years he was head of the great pharmaceutical house of Schieffelin & Co., for which he had been destined.

An all-wise Providence, however, led him, while still very young, to associate himself with the Citizens' Union, and he was the active president of it for thirty-two stormy years. This threw him into the City's politics, and he entered the arena not to hold public office but to battle the powers of darkness with an enthusiasm and fervor that were the wonder and admiration of all good men. He was a consecrated crusader, and he never grew tired. Although Tammany Hall was almost always the target in the never-ending struggle, he steadfastly maintained that the Citizens' Union was a nonpartisan organization, and he pointed out that it had consistently supported Alfred E. Smith, James A. Farley, and other Democratic candidates who demonstrated high standards of competence and honesty.

Besides clean government Schieffelin's other great interest was Negroes. He was a trustee of Hampton Institute, and he was always working for better conditions in the factories and homes where Negroes worked and lived. At the outbreak of the First World War he formally offered to raise a Negro cavalry regiment, of which he would be Colonel; but the offer was rejected by the President. The Governor, however, appointed him Colonel of the 15th New York Infantry (a Negro regiment of the State Guard).

Schieffelin was elected to the Century when he was only twenty-eight years old. He was young and gay, and good-looking, and he was full of confidence, and willingness to labor in the Lord's vineyard. Everybody liked him, and wished him well, and supported the Citizens' Union largely because they had confidence in his integrity. He was a person of great independence. Once at a trustees' board, referring to the president, who was present, he said: "This is the first time in my forty years of service on this board that we have had a president who is neither a Christian nor a gentleman."

The difficulty with such frankness is that it does not generally contribute to getting things done. And yet, sometimes it does. John Jay Chapman had a way of saying aloud whatever occurred to him, and his considered remarks exploded like dynamite. Perhaps it depends on the intellectual content. In the day of the salesman and the public relations expert it is well to remember that we really don't like panders; and Schieffelin was always willing to say so.

He was a member of the Club for sixty-one years—a long, pleasant time except at the end when he was invalided, but even then he was so courageous and cheerful it was an example to all of us. He was not a profound thinker nor a scholar in any field, but he was a man of broad intelligence and deep public interest, and he gave his time and talents to defend the City from those who would prey on it. It is remarkable that he was so little plagued with the bickerings and derision that soldiers of the cross are heir to, and this must be accounted to his happy and generous disposition; for though he was self-confident and not always tactful, he was never rude by inadvertence, nor did he proceed by indirection. He was, indeed, a gallant Christian gentleman.

George Arthur Sloan

George A. Sloan graduated from Vanderbilt University in 1915 with the degree of LL.B. and in the same year was admitted to the Tennessee bar. He never practised law, but joined his father in the textile business, and in a little while he went off to the First World War.

Problems of economics interested George very much, and all his life he devoted himself to improving understanding and cooperation among businessmen the world over. He was impatient with those who took a short view of foreign economic policies, and he steadfastly rejected the "just for now" concept. In the course of spreading his gospel, he got involved with every kind of enterprise, from the Metropolitan Opera in New York to the United States Steel Corporation. For him economics was not a theoretical philosophy—it was an active agent that operates according to ascertainable laws which must be observed if disaster is to be avoided.

George was sufficiently endowed so that he could occupy himself in these pursuits without regard to monetary compensation, and he became one of the most useful public servants of the City. He was a director of the Steel Corporation, and he was Chairman of the Metropolitan Opera. He was a Trustee of M.I.T. and head of the International Chamber of Commerce. He served on numberless committees appointed by the President, the Governor, and the Mayor, and the field ranged from unemployment relief, to the War Production Board, to the Advisory Counsel to the Department of Commerce. George thought of himself as an industrial executive, but he was much more than that. He was a magician who transformed dreams into realities. He was a sophisticated man of the world, yet he understood visionaries and artists and had their confidence. His proven competence was a guarantee to those who intrusted him with money, and his loyalty was a reassurance to those who don't know about money. He had a kind heart and a hard head; and where these are needed, there he was found spending himself to make this part of the world a better place to live.

James Renwick Sloane

James R. Sloane prepared at Lawrenceville, and graduated from Princeton in 1900. His father was a distinguished professor of history, but Jim, following a different bent, went to Columbia Law School, graduated in 1903 and was admitted to the New York bar. He practised law in the City more or less continuously the rest of his life, taking time out to go to the First World War and to serve on the Peace Commission in Paris.

In 1923 he was appointed counsel to the United States Shipping Board, and in 1925 counsel to the government on the Mexican Claims Arbitration Board. This was a long and important assignment involving all the claims of Americans against Mexico since 1868; and Sloane acquitted himself with great credit.

When he was a little boy, Jim's father was engaged in writing the life of Napoleon, and Jim was taken to Paris, where he lived for considerable periods while the professor was conducting researches for his book. This early experience colored Jim's future, for he came to know France and the French and to have a great interest in international law that largely determined his life's work.

Jim was born in Princeton, and there he died. His father taught there many years; and when Jim retired he went back there to live and to be with old friends and the countryside that he was familiar with long ago.

Bruce Smith

Bruce Smith graduated from Columbia in 1914 and from the Columbia Law School in 1916; and then he joined the staff of the Institute of Public Administration. He there became an expert on police methods and organization, so that, although he was usually known as a criminologist, he always thought of himself as a police administrator. Whatever the name, he came to be the outstanding authority on what a police force should be and how it should function. In Chicago he reorganized the police from top to bottom, and fifty other cities have had the advantage of his extensive experience and advice.

He was also interested in criminal justice, and he served on the New York Commission on the Administration of Justice, which dealt with all the criminal courts of the state from Justices of the Peace to General Sessions. He had an uncanny faculty for accomplishing his work without outward and visible signs of effort, which greatly added to his usefulness. He never wore a uniform, but he knew the insides of police stations from coast to coast, rode patrol cars, went on raids, and was familiar with the problems of law enforcers, from rural constables to the F.B.I. When he was taken with his last illness, he was at work on surveys and recommendations for Connecticut and Michigan.

Smith worked hard and had a good time. He was impatient of entrenched tradition and, like Bentham, insisted on reëxamining the reasons for procedures. This made him unpopular with bureaucrats; but there was no derision of the remarkable results of his analyses, and he had the high regard and confidence of those ultimately responsible for maintaining law and order.

When he got tired, he would go off to the Canadian woods and spend a vacation on canoe trips or trekking about in the wilderness. In recent years he became interested in sailing, and imported a sailboat from England. He was fortunate in his employment, for he was exceedingly competent and wholly engrossed in it. As in all romantic callings, the protagonist is aware that a deal of time and strength must be spent in merely accumulating statistics and data and that only too often disillusionment waits at the end of the rainbow. Bruce Smith knew all this, but he had the satisfaction of being acclaimed the ablest police administrator of the century; and he loyally served the author of peace and lover of concord whose service is perfect freedom.

Wallace Stevens

Wallace Stevens was born in Reading, Pa., and prepared for college at the Boys' High School there. He was fortunate in that the principal, who was a refugee Russian nobleman that had fled from Russia because of some political offense against the Czarist regime, was an imaginative and well-educated classical scholar, and he had a lasting influence on Stevens. Wallace went to Harvard, entering with the Class of 1901, but after three years he came to New York and took the LL.B. degree at New York Law School. He then spent fifteen years practising law in New York—so he says.

The fact is he spent this period in finding himself and planning his life so that he might have the time to be a poet. He experimented with different forms of versification and finally published a book of poetry, Harmonium. A competent critic insisted that Stevens was a weaver whose threads were words and that he spun webs to trap his moods. It followed that, although his work was remarkable, it would not endure.

His poetry endured well enough for Stevens to win a Pulitzer Prize, in 1955, and numerous other prizes, including honorary degrees from Harvard and from Columbia. Nevertheless, it was complicated writing, and the verses seemed to depend on rhythms where vowels and consonants were substituted for musical notes, and where ideas were subordinate to phonetics.

Stevens's own attitude toward his poetry was peculiar. He went to live in Hartford in 1916 and eventually became vice-president of a large insurance company. He ceased calling himself a lawyer and was an insurance executive—but never officially a poet. He gave the impression of writing poetry in his spare time, as though it were an amusing intellectual exercise like geometry originals. Whether this was due to shyness or to a sardonic streak is no particular matter; the fact remains he was a good poet and extraordinarily gifted in the use of words.

As a companion he was enigmatic and unpredictable, but he sometimes became bewildered himself, and evidently harbored conflicting and incompatible desires—like most of us. He felt a sense of imminent tragedy in the world; and in this connection he said that "what the poet gets is not necessarily a solution, but some defense against it." He was a complex personality, and poetry, which he regarded as an escape from reality, became in his economy the thing of beauty which made life real.

William Oliver Stevens

William O. Stevens graduated from Colby College in 1899, and took a Ph.D. at Yale in 1903. Then for twenty years he taught English, as professor, at the Naval Academy at Annapolis.

In 1924 he became headmaster of the Roger Ascham School at White Plains, and after a few years he changed to be headmaster of the Cranbrook School in Michigan. All the time he was teaching and school-mastering he was writing books—at first historical novels, but in his later years about psychic phenomena. He was a learned and cultivated man with a restless mind, but his manner was gentle and considerate and his academic excellence seemed subdued in a large wisdom. He gave the impression of knowing more than he told.

His preoccupation with psychical research came at a time when there was abroad a resurgence of popular interest in spiritualism, survival, and immortality, and Stevens found no difficulty in finding competent fellow-workers in the same vineyard. He was a satisfying and stimulating companion, receptive of new ideas, reluctant to be positive in disagreement. He was at the Club a great deal, using the library constantly, and he always contributed a first-class water color to the Autumn Amateur Exhibition.

Herbert Lawrence Stone

Herbert L. Stone was for nearly fifty years the editor of Yachting. He was a sailor from his earliest days. His first sailing, as able seaman on the Hattie Weston in 1888, was delayed by the Great Blizzard. But for some years afterwards he shipped before the mast on various sailing vessels in the Atlantic and the Caribbean.

He used to live at the New York Yacht Club in the winter, and in New Canaan in the summer. When he was not editing the magazine, he was sailing and writing about sailing. He was long a leader in running important yacht races, and he was a founder of the Cruising Club of America, which conducts the biennial race from Newport to Bermuda.

He was a very lively and amusing person, and he made Yachting what it is today: a really first-class magazine. He regarded sailing as an art susceptible of endless study, rewarding, satisfying, a source of contentment. He knew about the sea and what it does. It spoke to him as it spoke to Hawkins and to Drake.

> There is a pleasure in the pathless woods,
> There is a rapture on the lonely shore,

There is society, where none intrudes,
By the deep sea, and music in its roar.

Kenneth Burlen Turner

Kenneth B. Turner graduated from Hamilton in 1922 and from the Harvard Medical School in 1926. From there he entered the Presbyterian Hospital as an intern. He was the first intern they had ever had who could interpret an electrocardiogram; and this doubtless encouraged him to continue his interest in the heart and its reactions to chemical changes in the blood. He developed techniques to this end and an experimental approach to the complex relations involved, and these led to the establishment of the special physiological laboratories now rendered necessary by the advances in the diagnosis and management of cardiac and pulmonary disorders.

In 1944, Vannevar Bush, Director of the Office of Scientific Research and Development, was responsible for making a report to the President on a program for post-war scientific research and education. Dr. Bush had appointed various committees to study and report on different aspects of the problem, and one of these was a medical committee composed of exceedingly distinguished doctors. The other committees got their reports written and filed in a reasonable time, but the Medical Committee seemed unable to get anything done at all. The doctors could not agree on their ideas, nor could they integrate them in writing so as to afford a basis for discussion. Turner was the youthful Assistant Secretary of the Medical Committee. He was aware that the distinguished members of the Committee would neither do the formulating themselves nor permit anyone else to do it for them, and that the resistance of medical men to any institutional change or development is so great that the reaction to a program summarily reduced to writing would have been completely destructive. But he kept right on working over his difficult charges. He organized the materials and articulated them. He listened politely to the magi and kept his own counsel. In the end he got out a report favoring a National Science Foundation that medical men would and did support—a consummation requiring infinite patience and a high order of executive talent.

When he died, Turner was an Associate Professor at Columbia, Attending Physician at the Presbyterian Hospital and Director of the Cardiology Service. There are no appelations of rank to describe his outstanding quality: integrity. He did what he said he would, and he wasted no time mourning if his view did not prevail. He went forth to his work, and to his labor—until the evening.

William John Whittemore

William J. Whittemore was born in New York in 1860. He studied painting under William Hart at the National Academy of Design and at the Art Students League and, later, in Paris under Lefebvre, and he became a first-class artist and portrait painter. He was particularly successful with water colors and miniatures. His pictures reflected his nature: sensitive, refined, and technically accomplished.

He was ninety-four when he died, and he had been living for the last twenty years at East Hampton, where he had his home. He was always proud to be a member of the Century, and, in younger days, he was around a great deal. He worked enthusiastically over the decorations at the Twelfth Night party in 1933, and was most remarkably spry and active. But after that he came to the Club less and less, for his old friends began to get away ahead of him, and it is not so much fun after a while.

A coeval writes affectionately: "There was a delicacy in his manner, and his personality was gentle and lovable."

Herbert Budington Wilcox

Herbert B. Wilcox graduated from Yale in 1898 and from Columbia's College of Physicians and Surgeons in 1902. He spent two years as an intern at St. Luke's and then became associated with the Children's Medical Division of Bellevue Hospital, rising through the grades until, in 1920, he became director of the service, which position he held until 1925 when he was appointed Physician-in-Chief to the Babies Hospital. During all of these years, Wilcox held teaching appointments in pediatrics at the College of Physicians and Surgeons, culminating in 1921 when he was chosen Carpentier Professor of the Diseases of Children at his medical alma mater.

Wilcox came to the Babies Hospital at a time when plans were emerging for the physical and administrative association of the College of Physicians and Surgeons and the Presbyterian Hospital. As Professor of the Diseases of Children at Physicians and Surgeons, he was keenly aware of the wisdom of bringing Babies Hospital into the orbit of the proposed medical center. Into this project he threw himself wholeheartedly, gained the confidence of the trustees of the participating groups and, in 1930, despite the trials of planning, building, and transition, saw the new hospital swing into complete function at its present site. The accomplishment of this herculean task may be recorded in few words, but it was made possible only by the superb administrative ability exhibited by Wilcox during those difficult times, together with his talent for commanding confidence, cooperation, loyalty, and trust on the part of his associates and his subordinates.

By 1931, Wilcox had become fully convinced that his department should be put on a full-time basis insofar as it was possible. He thereupon resigned as executive officer of the Department of Diseases of Children, but remained on the staff of the hospital for the next eight years, consulting with, aiding, and cooperating with his successor—further evidence of his loyalty and ability to adapt himself to what he thought were the best interests of the institution which he built and loved.

All this time Wilcox was consulting physician to numerous hospitals in the City, and served on various medical boards. The sum of his activities and accomplishments is astounding. He was a wise and understanding man. He not only was a good physician to countless children, he was the kind and sympathetic comforter of frightened mothers, and a very rock of reliance for his fellow-practitioners. Goodness and mercy followed him all the days of his life; and he shall dwell in the house of the Lord forever.

Alexander Wiley

Alexander Wiley graduated from Yale in 1918, and immediately went off to Plattsburg Camp. He was commissioned Captain of Infantry and served overseas in the A.E.F. After the War, he entered the Harvard Law School, and graduated in 1922. He started to practise in the City; after a little time he formed his own firm, Schurman, Wiley, and Willcox, with which he was associated for many years; he was later a partner in Emmet, Marvin, and Martin. But about five years ago he was forced by ill health to retire, and of late he lived at his little farm at Pound Ridge in Westchester County.

Alec came of colonial stock; among his ancestors were David Waterbury, a General Officer in the Revolution, Jonathan Bishop, first Congregationalist minister of Stamford, and Martin Clock, a burgomaster under Peter Stuyvesant. Alec was himself born in Stamford, but he never seemed to be a typical Connecticut Yankee; he was interested in nature and books, like Thoreau.

As a lawyer, Alec was not a learned jurist, but he was an exceedingly resourceful and careful conveyancer. He knew all about the law of real estate, and he had the patience and the smiling serenity that seem to be essential to closing titles in New York. He did a great deal of this work, and did it very well indeed.

At Pound Ridge he had a house he called "Fee Simple," and he and his wife conducted a kind of bird sanctuary where lived not only transient birds of passage but also cranes, and wild ducks, and various exotic specimens that really had no business in that part of the world. The birds looked after themselves, for the most part, and left the owners free to go South in the winter and to Europe in the summer; and after he retired, Alec did just that.

In the last decade he was not at all well and had to take care of himself. This precluded his coming to the Club very often—a loss to the rest of us, for he was a lively, cultivated man, friendly, amusing, and tolerant.

Frederic Taylor Wood

Frederic T. Wood was born in Bangor. He graduated from Williams in 1898, and after a short time he went to work for the Metropolitan Street Railway Company in New York. He remained with that company and its successors for fifty-two years, finally retiring as Chairman of the Board of the Fifth Avenue Coach Company.

To be connected with rapid transit in this City is to live a life of travail. The service has never been satisfactory to the inhabitants, and there is no prospect that it ever will be. Taylor, however, was a tough, wiry man, well-suited to withstand the slings and arrows of outrageous fortune, and he was exceedingly competent at his calling. He survived the difficulties and troubles of providing municipal transportation in good order, and even got some fun out of it. He introduced open-topped, double-decker buses, imported from England, with French gasoline engines, as early as 1912; and these were followed by the closed-tops known as "Queen Marys."

When he was not engaged in carrying the local denizens around town, Taylor was involved with education. He was a trustee of Williams, and a strong defender of the old-style school methods, maintaining that the study of Latin and Greek was as good for mental discipline as mathematics. He continued to read Greek himself throughout his life, and it restored his soul.

Taylor was a superior person. He came from Down East, and he was endowed with the reticences that are associated with that part of the world. He was a scholarly and cultivated man, and he brought to his work a lively imagination and a vision of the possibilities that made it an exciting and rewarding way of life.
